

Gen. Watson Schedules Visit Here

Lt. Gen. Albert Watson II, new commander of the Third U. S. Army with headquarters in Atlanta, will pay his first official visit to the Ordnance Guided Missile School on Mar. 28, it was announced Monday.

Col. William J. Macpherson, Missile School commandant, was notified by a Watson aide of the scheduled visit. The Third Army supplies OGMS with administrative and logistical support through Continental Army Command channels.

At the same time, it was learned that the Tennessee Valley Chapter of the Association of the U. S. Army has invited Gen. Watson to address a membership meeting during his visit here. Joseph C. Moquin, president, extended the invitation.

Gen. Watson assumed command of the Third Army on Feb. 2 after serving as commandant of the Army's sector in Berlin, Germany. He succeeded Lt. Gen. T. J. H. Trapnell who retired in December.

SWEET AS SUGAR—Sixteen-year-old Kay Holston and Frank Johnson, 12, get a preview of how the Army's oral polio immunization will be done as SP6 Thomas Knight prepares to drop serum on Frank's sugar cube. The three-stage polio immunization cycle will begin Feb. 16. Other days for immunization are Mar. 30 and May 11. Dependents of active duty and retired military personnel, in addition to retired personnel, will be inoculated at Building 117, the Dependents Out Patients Clinic, near the Redstone Arsenal Hospital. Active duty soldiers will receive inoculation with their units. Children under six weeks of age will not be immunized. Kay is the daughter of Lt. Col. and Mrs. Alfred Holston, who reside at Redstone Arsenal. Frank is the son of M/Sgt. Willard Johnson, who currently is stationed with the Army team at Ascension Island.

PERSHING PIONEERS GRADUATE

Historic meeting of highly skilled men and ultra-modern machinery took place here last Friday as the Army Ordnance Guided Missile School awarded its first diplomas to men trained to maintain the powerful new Pershing ballistic missile.

The Pershing which can fire nuclear warheads from its own self-propelled vehicle is soon to become operational with the Army in the field. It will replace the famous Redstone missile.

The 27 Pershing specialists who were graduated last week were the first to complete a full training course here and will soon join the 44th Artillery Group now being formed at Fort Sill, Okla.

The graduates heard C. H. Plyer, chief of logistics from the Orlando, Fla., division of The Martin Co., describe the versatility of the new solid-fueled weapon which can be launched in minutes from unprepared positions in all sorts of weather. Orders to fire the powerful weapon must come from an Army commander, usually a three-star general.

Plyer said the Pershing specialists had received as much as 2,700 hours of instruction per man on the Army's "shoot and scoot" weapon.

Touching on future weapons development, Plyer predicted that "the Army will get back into space some day."

Four Pershing students were named as honor graduates. They are: Pfc. Ronald L. Tingley, 23, of Sedro-Wolley, Wash., in Test (See PIONEERS on Page 2)

American Political Tradition To Be Viewed By Troops

"The American Political Tradition," a special lecture on the development of this nation's system of political parties, will be presented via video tape to some 2,000 students at the Ordnance Guided Missile School this week.

The lecture is part of the continuing OGMS Troop Information program which presents a timely topic each week to the military students at the school.

The current lecture was recorded by Dr. Charles M. Hersh executive assistant for education at OGMS and a professor of history at the Huntsville Center of the University of Alabama. Facilities of the Missile School's television branch were used to prepare the special program which is presented at the request of Defense Secretary Robert McNamara.

The 45-minute lecture is being screened during the week in several OGMS auditoriums.

Federal Joint Fund Has Local Campaign Kickoff

The 1963 joint fund drive for the National Health Agencies and the Federal Service Joint Crusade gets underway at Redstone Arsenal this week.

Administrative details of the crusade were outlined at a kickoff organizational meeting Feb. 7 by Gus Brown, Installation & Service Office, Army Missile Command, who acts as drive chairman for the second time.

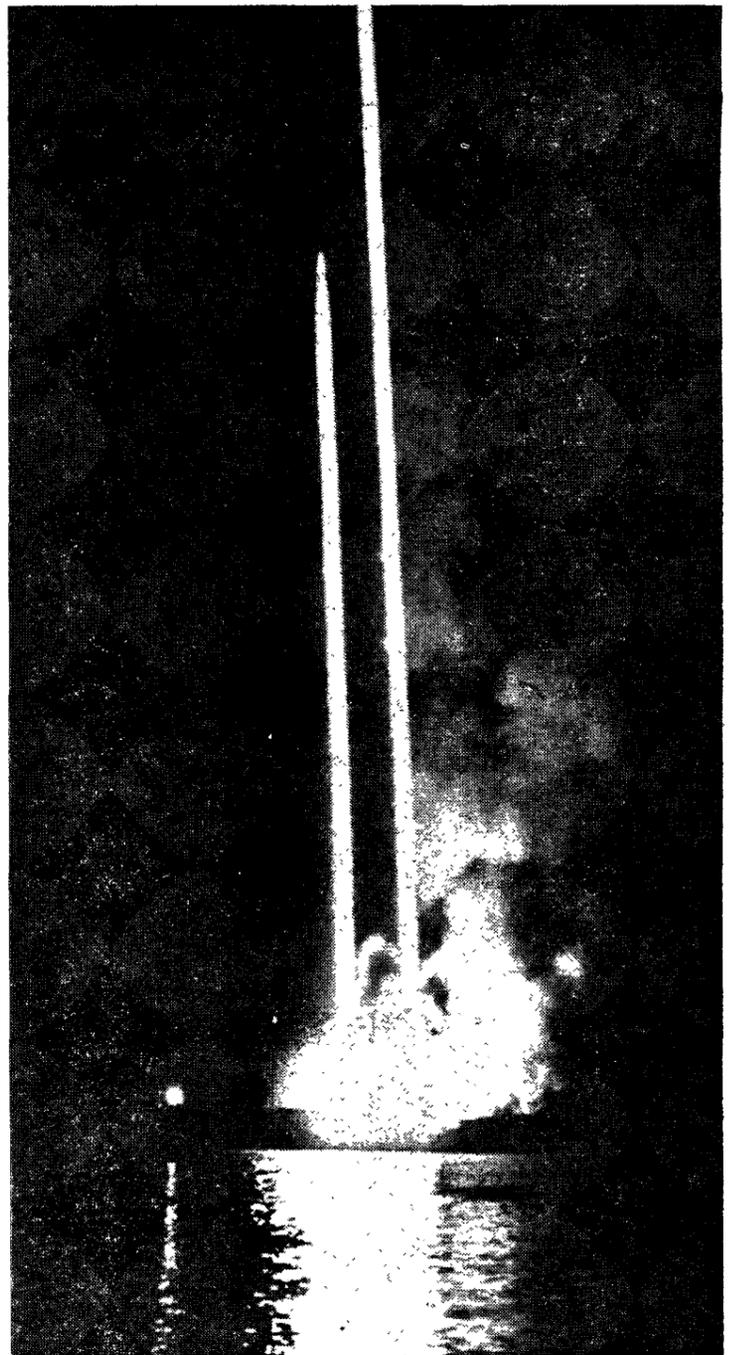

Representatives from the various agencies of the Army Missile Command, Army Missile Support Command, Ordnance Guided Missile School, Thiokol Chemical Corp. and Rohm & Haas Co., all of whom act as drive chairmen for their organizations, received instructions for organizing the campaign within their units.

They hope to have crusade material in the hands of key men by Friday, Feb. 15. Brown explained there should be one key man for every 25 employees or less.

The campaign this year again supports two separate fund-raising appeals: the drive for the National Health Agencies and the Federal Service Joint Crusade. The National Health Agencies campaign provides funds for six agencies: The Arthritis and Rheumatism Foundation, Muscular Dystrophy Associations of Amer-

SALVO—Two Army Nike Zeus anti-missile missiles burn streaks in the night sky above Kwajalein Island in the mid-Pacific. The two-missile salvo was launched in an attempt to intercept a target vehicle boosted by an intercontinental ballistic missile fired west over the Pacific. Hearts And Flowers Tomorrow

Tomorrow is the day St. Valentine aims his missile of love and appreciation with unmistakable accuracy.

Throughout the years the traditional message has come to mean flowers . . . candy . . . comic messages . . . or hearts and lace without the arsenic . . . Sometimes just a few words saying "thanks."

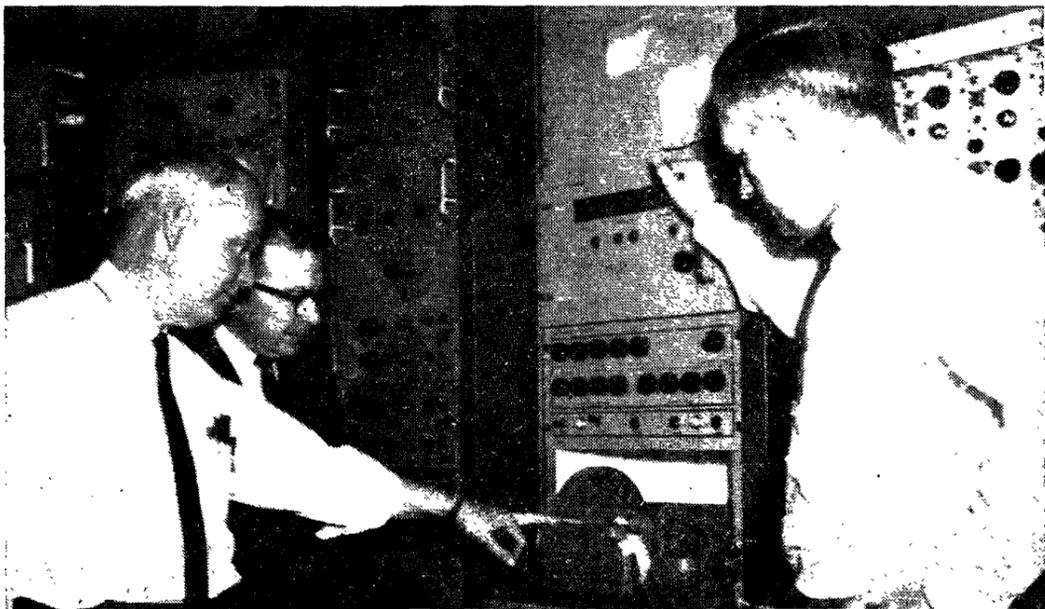

The Redstone Rocket is using St. Valentine's Day 1963 as the time to throw a bouquet to the many men and women throughout the Army Missile Command and the Army Ordnance Guided Missile School who loyally contribute news to the Rocket.

Many of you are designated by your superiors as our contact in addition to your regular jobs. To you we say a job well done. Others of you are just interested . . . and think, "That should be in the Rocket." To those of you who take the time and trouble to call us, many thanks.

Without your help we could not begin to cover the Army at Redstone Arsenal.

Your tips and stories do not always get into print. Space, time and policy frequently prevent our using everything which comes our way, but we are always glad to hear from you.

To all of you, "Thanks," and please keep up the good work!

Safety Record Reaches 3 Million Accident-Free ManHours At Watertown

WATERTOWN ARSENAL, Mass.—Col. Robert B. Braid, Commanding Officer of Watertown Arsenal and the Army Materials Research Agency announced last week that this installation reached a milestone in its accident prevention program by completing 3 million manhours of operation without a disabling injury.

Col. Braid expressed his personal congratulations to all personnel of the installation who, by their continuous efforts, assisted in accomplishing this record.

Watertown Arsenal, located in Watertown, Massachusetts, is one of the oldest government Arsenals in this country.

The Arsenal was part of the Ordnance Corps until the recent Army reorganization. It is now directly associated with the Army Missile Command.

Watertown Arsenal has long been a leader in development of new metallurgical techniques. Under the reorganization several of the Arsenal materials research laboratories and operations were combined to form the new Army Materials Research Agency.

With the diversity of industrial and research operations and use of previously untried techniques of materials processing, the safety and welfare of its people has been of prime concern to the Arsenal management. An effective accident prevention program has been established in coordination with similar efforts of the higher commands as well as those of private industry. The Department of the Army has recognized Watertown Arsenal for its safety efforts on several occasions in the past.

School Consolidates Registration of Students

New students arriving at the Ordnance Guided Missile School no longer face the problems of moving from building to building to in-process.

A new central-type system has been devised and is now located in Bldg. 3480 and will be used to handle the increased student load at OGMS. It will be operated only on Monday mornings from 6:00 till 11:00 a.m.

The time normally required, per student, to in-process was approximately two and a half hours. It is now accomplished in about half an hour by using the eleven station central-type plan.

At the first station, the new student receives an orientation briefing on OGMS, Redstone Arsenal, Huntsville and Madison County. They are acquainted with local Security regulations, and facilities available on and off post. They are also briefed on local laws that apply both on and off the Arsenal.

From the orientation the student moves to the POR (Preparation for Overseas Replacement)

Board.

Next stop is the classification and assignment section of the Registrar's Office. Here the student's Enlisted Qualifications Record is checked for the individual scores on Army Area-Aptitude Tests. These may be used for placement purposes and for re-assignment if the student should become an academic failure during his course.

At the fourth station, representatives of the Security Office check the student's records to verify or initiate the necessary security clearance.

Station five is a records check by military personnel division to insure that all records and data needed is current and correct.

Military pay records are checked at the next station for completeness, for back pay due, and to insure that the student has no apparent pay problem. At this point he is given the opportunity to correct any errors that may exist in his pay records.

The next station is also concerned with pay. Here the travel itinerary is checked for voucher settlement and also for dislocation of dependents travel.

Locator cards are maintained in many areas throughout the school. These are filled out at station eight.

No military processing would be complete without shots, and new students at OGMS are no exception. Dispensary B furnishes station nine with personnel to administer the inoculations and immunizations.

The only part of the processing not located in Bldg. 3480 is station ten. Students are carried by bus to the Quartermaster Store to be fitted for, and issued safety shoes. With this completed, they return to Bldg. 3480 for the final step in processing.

The last station is operated by the Provost Marshal's Office Identification-Registration Section. Here badges are issued and privately owned vehicles, cameras, binoculars and firearms are registered.

Civilian students arriving at OGMS are processed through only two of the eleven stations, security and identification-registration sections. The remainder of their processing is conducted by Civilian Personnel.

With processing completed, the student is on his way to classes in the afternoon.

O-O-OUCH!—Pvt. Kenneth Murray doesn't seem at all happy with the present situation as Sgt. Russel Carter, Dispensary B, punctures his arm with a "Square?" needle.

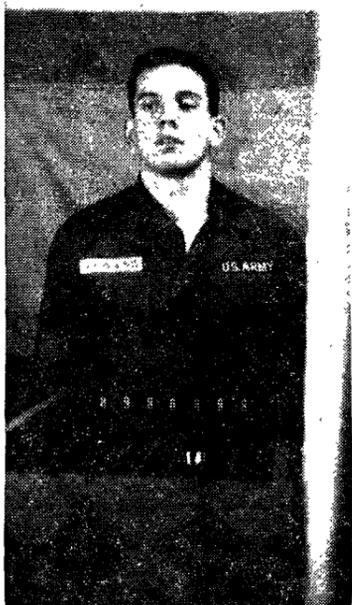

PERSONNEL RECORDS—PFC Richard Lynch, 201 File Clerk, checks over the Field 201 file of Pvt. Forrest L. Miller to insure that all the information that will be needed by the personnel section is present in his records.

PLEASED WITH THE RESULTS—Maj. William Tarr, center, chief of the Personnel Administration Division, Lt. Frederic Richter, chief of Personnel Services Branch, and security clerk SP4 Donald Rhoad compare notes on how the central-type processing is going.

ORIENTATION—SP4 Frederic Tipton, School Troop Command S-3, gives a briefing on what students can expect at the Ordnance Guided Missile School during their training as "missilemen."

IN JAIL? — No, the bars in the picture are merely light supports for the Provost Marshall Identification Section's camera used to take badge photographs. Even so, Pvt. George Downing appears a little unsure of it all.

In rarified mountain air a climber's blood has little reserve of oxygen and he must pause every few steps to catch his breath. Bearing 30 pounds at 19,000 feet is as difficult as carrying 210 pounds at sea level.

A little goes a long way

In fact, some people who drive our little flivver don't even think 32 miles to the gallon is going any great guns.

Or using five pints of oil instead of five quarts.

Or never needing anti-freeze.

Or racking up 40,000 miles on a set of tires.

That's because once you get used to some of our economies, you don't even think about them any more.

Except when you squeeze into a small parking spot. Or renew your small insurance. Or pay a small repair bill. Or trade in your old VW for a new one.

Think it over.

Troop Information Center In Library

A special Troop Information center has been established at the OGMS Technical Library in Building 3323, it was announced this week.

The center will display maps and pertinent Department of the Army, Continental Army and Third Army troop information material.

Mrs. Mabel Hoffmeyer, OGMS librarian, said she and her staff will assist Troop Information instructors in finding reference material and other data required to support the weekly sessions held by the School Troop and Unit Training Commands at OGMS.

FROM DRAWING BOARD TO FIRING TRAJECTORY—Dick Miller (left) explains a portion of his mural depicting the development of Army missiles from inception to target to Steven Dohanos, widely-celebrated American artists and a member of the Famous Artist School board. Dohanos admired the completeness and complexity of the mural which shows every phase of missile building from the birth of an idea to pinpointing on target.

Miller Designed Mural Hangs In Headquarters

A mural, so busy it would take a week to glue all the impressions on the mind, hangs in the foyer of the U. S. Army Missile Command Headquarters at Redstone Arsenal.

A stylized representation of the evolution of a missile system, the design and painting by Dick Miller of the Visual Arts Branch, Audio-Visual Communications Division pinpoints the steps from idea to operation.

John Kubilis, then in the Army Rocket and Guided Missile Agency, conceived the idea and asked several artists to design a mural to hang in the headquarters lobby. Miller's design was adopted and he went to work.

The work was sandwiched between regularly scheduled projects and took 18 months to complete.

Miller, who paints as an avocation as well as a vocation, is a native Californian who graduated from Chouinard Art Institute in Los Angeles.

His first experience as a military illustrator was as an enlisted man at Ft. Benning, Georgia. He stayed on the job after discharge from the Army.

In 1952 he went to Dallas, Texas to free-lance as a commercial artist. Six years later he joined the staff at Redstone Arsenal.

Miller considers winning the commission the easiest part of the mural. He dislikes copying, — even his own work.

The mural has a harberite base with rabbit skin glue and gesso forming the plaster-like surface. Miller ran the gauntlet in techniques using brush, palette knife, stenciling, air brush, stipple, sponge and potato printing. Other illustrators in the unit helped.

The painting has won acclaim from art critics and artists alike including Steven Dohanos, a director of the Famous Artists' School and famous for his New Yorker covers and health research posters.

SIGNS FOR GOLF TOURNAMENT—Lt. Brad Davis (left) of the 291st Military Police Corps shows Brig. Gen. H. P. Golfers Aim To Beat Arnold Palmer In Tournament Sponsored By MP's

By Lt. Brad Davis
291st Military Police Company

As the weatherman optimistically predicts a bright spring, the golf addicts of Redstone Arsenal begin flocking to the links. To kick-off a satisfying season of competition, the Military Police Association, represented locally by the 291st MP Company, is presenting their annual International Golf Day.

The handicap tournament, initiated in 1957 by the MPA is intended to provide revenue for charity. Tickets cost $1.00 each, of which $.75 goes to a local charity and $.25 goes to the MPA for expenses.

This year the man to beat is 1962 Masters winner, Arnold Palmer. Palmer's score in the first round of the 1963 Masters Tournament, on April 4th, will be the qualifying round. Participants who beat Palmer's score using either their established handicap or the Calloway system, will receive a handsome smoke-colored ash tray suitable to be used as a plaque.

Beginning today, score card-tickets will be sold at the RSA golf course, the Central Police Station, and by roving MP "super-salesmen." A booth will be set up on the golf course and tickets sold every weekend until April 4, 1963—the date all rounds must be completed and all cards turned in.

You may place as many times as desired provided you submit the entrance fee each time you play. This fee does not include green fees. After the round is played you may turn in your score-board-ticket at the booth or to any Military Policeman on the Arsenal.

All winners will be published after the tourney is completed, and all prizes will be delivered directly to the participants. For information contact Lt. Brad Davis, 291st MP Company, Telephone 876-2489—or more likely from now until April 4th at the golf course on the tee!

Remember, since this is a handicap tourney, whether you are a beginner, a top-flight amateur, or club pro, you do have a chance to beat Arnold Palmer. You will have fun, promote good will, and assist your local charity—all for a dollar.

In recent games played, the Redstone Team won two and lost two.

The Rockets of Redstone downed the Victory Cafe 101 to 91 in a game at the Post Gymnasium. Redstone was never behind at any point of the game and five Redstone starters scored in double figures, led by Joe Turner with 26 points. Tomlinson was the high man for the Victory Cafe with 29 points.

Over the weekend Redstone traveled to Ft. McClellan and the outcome left the Rockets on the short end in two games, losing the first game 103 to 61 and the second 94 to 72. Carl Short of McClellan was the leading scorer at the 3d Army Tournament last year and was the big gun in both games with a total of 74 points.

Redstone rode the high scoring of three performers to a victory over the Walnut Grove team last Tuesday night. Joe Turner fired 30 points to lead the boys to a 97 to 57 win, along with Comstock's 21 points and Wolet's 19. Berry was high for the losers with

Time is rapidly running out for all talented people, because the Post-Wide Talent Contest is only 13 days away. So if anyone is still interested in entering, I suggest you get a move on. The amount of entries to date has been kind of disappointing, but the quality of the acts that have entered has not been, not by a long shot.

We certainly have plenty of room on the program for your act. Why not get with it and join in the fun. The prizes have been ordered and they will certainly be worth the effort for the winners. Of course everyone can't win, but it is a wonderful opportunity for you to pit your talent against all comers.

Usually in a contest of this nature the entries are divided into categories. But to enhance the spirit of competition we have decided to make it a completely open contest. The winners will be judged on showmanship and audience appeal. Singers will be competing against combo, combo against dancer, dancer against comedy acts, etc.

A meeting will be held on Monday, Feb 18, of all the acts that are entered and those who wish Russian.

The soldier expanded his language talent at a place well known to Army translators — the Army Language School at Monterey, Calif.

The unassuming Soshinsky spent considerable time working as a repatriation specialist with displaced persons in war-torn Europe. He is fluent in English, Russian and Polish; speaks some German; and is familiar with all the Slavic languages.

Because of his linguistic ability, Soshinsky worked for the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Agency (UNRRA) in the British Sector of Germany during 1946-47.

"I can't go into details about the work," he relates, "but it was very interesting."

While working with the UNRRA shortly after World War II, Soshinsky "screened displaced people in order to eliminate those who did not qualify for displaced person status"—such as Hitler's SS (secret police).

As a displaced person, refugees could qualify for emigration to free countries in the Western hemisphere.

He proudly exhibits a Polish army hat insignia souvenir, given to him by an ex-cavalryman in the Polish army who survived Nazi concentration camps only because of his familiarity with horses.

The Pole later was freed and worked with Soshinsky in an UNRRA position.

Soshinsky's Missile Intelligence job today is less exciting than the work in which he was involved shortly after the war — but he finds it interesting.

"I spend most of my time reading Soviet military and scientific publications," he explains. "It's only one facet of the Missile Intelligence Directorate's job of making technical evaluations of foreign missile systems."

Today Soshinsky's work is directly related to the job of the Missile Command's Directorate of Missile Intelligence, which includes technical evaluations of foreign missile systems.

As a constant reader of Russian newspapers and scientific reports Soshinsky has his finger in the middle of the Soviet propaganda pie.

"Everything printed by the Soviet Union is printed for a specific purpose," he says. Some of those purposes:

To stimulate Russians who are not Communist Party members toward more activities so that they may be accepted by the party;

To enhance the feeling of nationalist inherent in the Communist ideology, government and politics;

To make leaders of the Communist Party immortal;

To encourage Russians and Party members alike to sacrifice current needs for a better life in the future.

Soshinsky believes that fear and nationalism, in that order, are perhaps the primary factors in keeping the Russian people in line with Communist Party thinking.

Soshinsky estimates that 90 per cent of all stories in Soviet newspapers and similar publications are printed only for propaganda purposes.

"Scientific papers are different," the soldier explains. "They usually stick to the facts and a detailed explanation. They are just like scientific papers printed in America."

During the Korean conflict, Soshinsky served in Korea — the same place his father was stationed as an Imperial Russian Army sergeant during the Russian-Japanese war of 1904-05.

As for the future, Soshinsky plans to retire from active military duty on Mar. 1. He has not made definite plans about what kind of work he will pursue, but he is leaning heavily toward remaining in the linguistic field.

RUSSIAN-READING TRANSLATOR—Army SP7 B. J. Soshinsky reads his daily newspaper on the job at the Army Missile Command's Directorate of Missile Intelligence. Soshinsky's newspaper reading is not of the usual kind, however. He's reading Pravda, the official Communist Party mouthpiece. The soldier's linguistic ability has been the nucleus of a colorful military career.

Interpreter Spends Day Reading Russian Papers

Army Sp/7 B. J. Soshinsky's typical work day is apt to begin when his boss walks into the office and invites him to read the morning newspaper.

While this sort of on-the-job reading is generally regarded in the same bad taste as a snake bite, Soshinsky has a firm corner on his newspaper-reading market. The ones he reads are printed in Russia.

Soshinsky is the only Russian-reading translator in the Army Missile Command's Directorate of Missile Intelligence.

At 46, Soshinsky can look back on a 20-year military career which has been about as drab as a missile belching multicolored flames at lift-off.

One of the more interesting episodes in Soshinsky's career involves a boost he once gave to a charming premiere ballerina in her bid to escape her suppressed Lithuanian homeland to the Free World. And he did it all in the line of duty.

The seemingly shy soldier's military career has been molded around his linguistic ability which comes somewhat naturally. His father was born in the Russian Ukraine; his mother in Russian controlled Lithuania.

Soshinsky himself was born in Iowa, where his parents moved in 1912.

He attended Cortland State Teachers College in Cortland, N. Y., from 1934 to 1937. He later attended Windham College in Putney, Vt., where he studied SCIENTISTS DISCUSS VALVE—Two Redstone Arsenal research scientists are shown discussing the pure fluid valve perfected by the Electromagnetics Laboratory of the Directorate of Research and Development. Charles Schreiner, chief of the Electrodynamics Branch, and project leader Kenneth C. Evans worked with the scientists instrumental in developing the device used in guidance control of missiles.

Research Scientists Develop Light Valve For High Pressure Hot Gases

Research scientists at the U. S. Army Missile Command have developed a valve that may solve one of the great problems in missile work, that of providing an efficient light-weight device for valving high pressure hot gases.

The simple, light-weight and efficient valve is being perfected and tested by scientists working in the Electromagnetics Laboratory of the Directorate of Research and Development.

Project scientists have made working models of a fluid valve that has no moving parts to corrode, wear or warp. Development work to date has been directed toward a device used in control of small missiles.

Two research scientists, Charles Schreiner, chief of the Electrodynamics Branch, and Kenneth C. Evans, project leader of the group of scientists and engineers, feel the valve is not limited to these uses but also has application to direct bleed secondary injection.

The research group headed by Evans is made up of Joe Halisky, William E. Lane, J. C. Dunaway, Carroll Godwin and Vernon Ayre.

The valve is: Simple because it is a block of metal with holes, contains no moving parts exposed to hot gas and its tolerances are not critical.

Light-weight for it is made of low density metal weighing only a few ounces for small missile applications.

Efficient because it provides a high percentage of the energy available in the gas in the form of side thrust.

The device consists of a converging-diverging nozzle similar to a missile motor nozzle, two side ports for admission of atmospheric pressure and a chamber branching into two exhaust openings.

While the construction of the valve is simple, the principles involved in valving high pressure hot gases are not.

Evans explained the valve's basic operation this way:

Gases from a solid propellant gas generator are normally released through the valve's nozzle into the main chamber at a velocity of approximately Mach. 3.6, which is almost four times faster than speed of sound. The design of the nozzle, which is a new feature of this device, increases the velocity of the hot gases. Previous low pressure designs had a straight tube type nozzle.

Evans pointed out that the problem is to get the high velocity gases to move to one side of the chamber and exhaust out the desired opening. This is done, he stated, by opening one atmospheric port and closing the other. The open port supplies a relatively high pressure differential across the gas stream as well as momentum from the incoming air.

Both the pressure differential and the momentum of the air combine to form a pushing effect on the exhaust stream causing it to deflect and in turn to exhaust at the surface of the missile to create a reactive thrust for missile control.

The reaction achieved by valving the hot gases to the proper channel provides pitch, yaw or roll control for the missile, Evans said. Three valve units are used in the system the scientists used as a test model.

Evans pointed out that the only moving part in such a system is a rocker-arm device used to open and close the atmospheric ports. Response time to guidance commands is limited only by the reaction time of the electro-mechanical rocker-arm. He pointed

RESEARCH

(Continued From Preceding Page) out that relatively little power is required to move solenoids used with this technique because the moving parts are not exposed to the wear and tear of the high velocity hot gas exhausts.

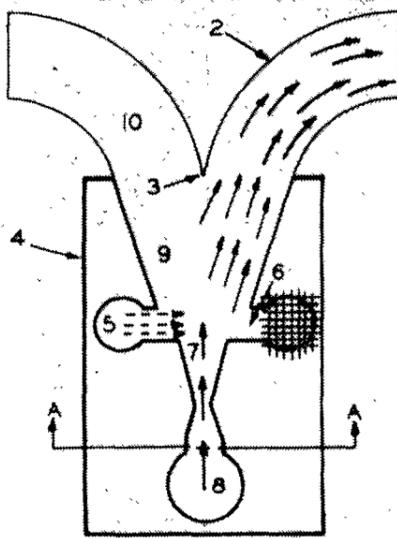

Schreiner said the valve has been found to be effective at source pressures of up to 1200 pounds per square inch and temperatures to 2400 degrees Fahrenheit. These are not the upper limits, he said. Because of the inherent nature of the device it can be made to operate at the same temperatures and pressures which motor nozzles will withstand.

Valves of varying sizes are being tested at the Electromagnetics Laboratory. Some smaller than ones hand produce an output of 18 pounds thrust, while valves weighing only a few pounds produce 50 pounds thrust.

Scientists test the experimental valve with high pressure air before using hot gas generators. Evans stated the hot gas tests must be completed under range safety conditions.

Schreiner said work done in the laboratory on the 'pure fluid' valve is an extension of principles developed by the Diamond VALVE SCHEMATIC—The operation of a pure fluid valve perfected by research scientists of the Electromagnetics Laboratory of the U. S. Army Missile Command is depicted in the schematic above. Parts of the valve are: 1. Output; 2. Ducting; 3. Splitter; 4. Valve Body; 5. Control Port; 6. Bubble; 7. Power Jet; 8. Power Supply; 9. Receiver Section; 10. Exit Channels; Section AA depicts a cross section of the valve with the electromechanical rocker arm which controls the operation.

Ordnance Fuze Laboratory in Washington, D. C. He stated his research scientists have developed new concepts which work for low pressure systems and has extended them in making a valve that will operate in high pressure, high temperature missile applications.

A "pure fluid" control system is one in which all functions are accomplished by interaction of fluid flow. This type of system would replace control systems which presently use electronic, electromechanical and mechanical means for accomplishing its purpose.

Projecting the future uses of the valve, Schreiner stated that the device could be used to valve hot gasses in a completely "pure fluid" control system.

Schreiner pointed out that moving parts, such as jet vanes and flapper type valves, exposed to high pressures and temperatures are less desirable, particularly at higher temperatures, because the parts tend to corrode and warp. Electromechanical devices such as relays and solenoids made to operate conventional valves will not work efficiently when moving parts stick and bind. Quick response to guidance signals is also lost when this occurs.

He said the gases from a rocket motor could be valved efficiently to be used in exhaust de-flection. This type of guidance will be more trouble free than jet vanes exposed to rocket motor exhausts.

Schreiner said the laboratory started the program about a year ago after studying the basic low pressure approach at the Diamond Ordnance Fuze Laboratory.

He said the laboratory's efforts are directed in making simple, low cost and reliable hardware needed in the Army missile program.

Scientists Schreiner and Evans expect great things from the valve. They and their colleagues have put in many hours designing and testing to make the result of their research simple, light weight and efficient.

At the Service Club

By Brenda Hanson

In February, Cupid's arrows fly—carrying hearts, flowers and candy.

This week at the Service Club the annual "Sweetheart Serenade" is scheduled. Huntsville and Birmingham Junior hostesses will be there. Wives and sweethearts are invited to the dance—girls are always in short supply.

David Izen teaches weekly dance classes. More girls are needed for these. Classes are held in the Main Lounge on Wednesday nights at 7.

The Sweetheart Serenade begins Thursday at 7:30 p.m. with Charley Lyle's orchestra playing. The dress is semi-formal. Those who don't dance can listen and watch.

Friday a card party is scheduled at 7:30 p.m., with a selection of games offered.

A pool contest begins Feb. 15 at 8 p.m. with prizes for the winner.

Kitchen Kapers at 6:30 p.m. highlights Saturday.

Sunday morning coffee call at 9 a.m. and Sunday night platter spin from 8 p.m. until 11 p.m. are scheduled.

Game night begins at 8:15 p.m.

Four Sergeants Promoted

Two Mississippians, a Kentuckian and a Wisconsinite earned Army plums in the form of promotion.

Sergeant Major James H. Judd of the Army Missile Support Command Troop Command staff and Sergeant Major Edgar R. Slayton were promoted to the Army's highest enlisted rank, E-9.

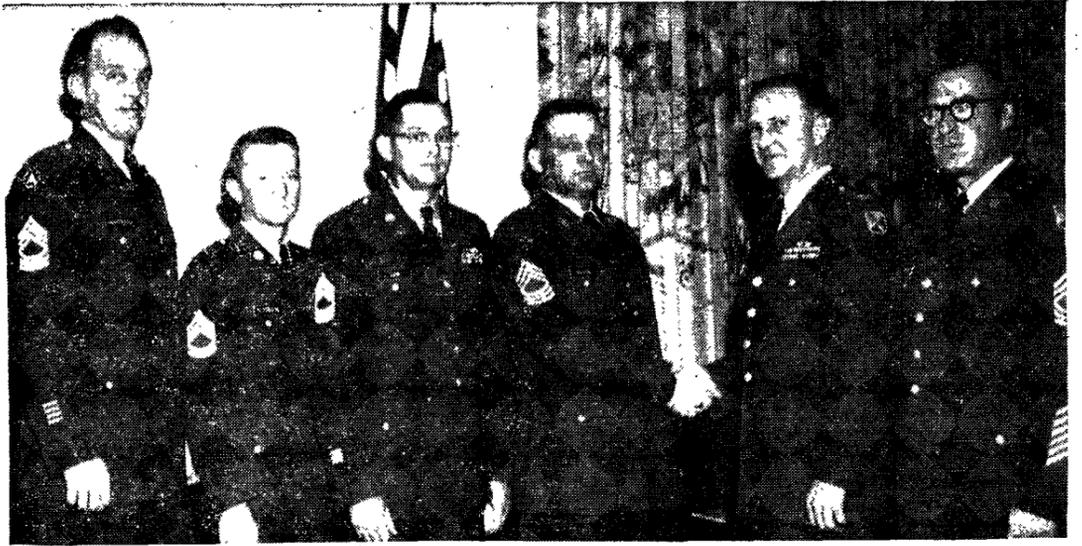

Master Sergeant Paul E. Hoverson, a personnel management supervisor in the Military Personnel Division, Army Missile Command, and M/Sgt. James E. Robinson, Noncommissioned officer in charge in the Command Inspection Office of the Assistant for Logistics, Army Missile Support Command, were promoted to E-8.

The promotions were announced after the recent meeting of the Board at Redstone Arsenal.

Sgt. Maj. Judd, the Kentuckian, is on his second round in his present position. He completed a tour in Korea between assignments at Redstone Arsenal. When he returned he worked as First Sergeant of ABMA and then of the Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, Missile Support Command, before assignment as sergeant major. He succeeds Sgt. Maj. Slayton who also served as first sergeant of a Headquarters detachment, Army Missile Command troops, and is on his second tour in the Adjutant's Office at the Missile Support Command.

Sgt. Maj. Slayton and M/Sgt.

Robinson are both Mississippians who remember duty tours in Alaska with nostalgia.

M/Sgt. Hoverson, originally from Wisconsin, is also serving his second term in his present slot. He completed a tour in Korea between assignments at the Missile Command.

How many times have you heard the old saying, "Life is a University" There's a lot of truth to it, you know.

But an awful lot of people are flunking the course. If you shut your mind to new thoughts, to new facts and ideas, then you're not getting the most out of the university of life. Learning should be a life-long process. It keeps us young in spirit and thought.

It helps us master life's problems as they come along. If you find that you've been stuck in the same old rut of thinking or drifting aimlessly maybe you need to take hold of yourself and start off in the right direction. At your Post Library, you find the books and magazines to put you back on the track.
