

'Restrictive sanction' put on local apartments

BY SKIP VAUGHN

Military personnel may not enter into rental agreements with Mayfair Apartments in Huntsville as a result of a restrictive sanction imposed by the deputy post commander.

Col. Burt Dall imposed the sanction for alleged practices of racial discrimination by the apartment rental firm located on Patton Road just outside the arsenal's gates.

Dall's order, effective Feb. 23, 1981, prohibited Redstone Arsenal military personnel from renting an apartment at Mayfair Village Apartments. The order did not affect soldiers living in those apartments before its effective date, Dall said.

The alleged practices in question dated from 1977, according to Army files. Allegations included that black people were given false information when inquiring about accommodations; blacks were quoted "higher" prices; and blacks were "further discouraged" by management with "additional and unfair costs regarding rentals."

Tom Reynolds, resident manager at Mayfair Village Apartments, declined comment on the allegations of racial discrimination. "I have no response on that whatsoever," he said. "In fact I don't think I'm supposed to even voice my opinion on the matter."

Reynolds said some soldiers live in the Mayfair apartments. "I believe me and the secretary counted nine the other day," he said.

Asked if any black people live at Mayfair, Reynolds replied that there are black civilians living there.

Bldg 5681 workers potentially exposed to asbestos

Workers in Bldg. 5681 were "potentially exposed to some level of airborne asbestos" last November, but the risk of adverse health effects "appears to be very small" the Army Environmental Hygiene Agency (AEHA) has reported.

The findings are based on lab analysis of samples taken in 5681 in mid-December as part of a survey asked for by MICOM to determine the potential for asbestos related health hazards there.

That precaution was taken after contractor work crews modifying the south end of the building in November, disturbed ceiling insulation believed to contain asbestos. The command later decided to remove all the insulation, a job still going on.

AEHA took samples of the insulation, air in the work area and dust from the tops of partitions and panels in the false ceiling. The agency's tests found the insulation contained between 10 and 15 percent asbestos. No asbestos fibers were found in the air samples. Asbestos was found in the dust samples.

Asbestos in the dust, AEHA said, confirmed the presence of airborne asbestos at some time in the past. As a result, the agency concluded:

"Workers in Bldg. 5681 were potentially exposed to some level of airborne asbestos during the period when renovation was underway. Exposure level would be to some degree dependent upon the distance between the location of the employee and the point of release.

"This exposure was an incidental exposure, and the possibility of exposure otherwise appears to be slight.

"The risk of adverse health effects posed by a one time or relatively short-time exposure cannot be precisely determined but would appear to be very small . . .

"It should be noticed that the increased probability of cancer or other adverse health effects from this potential exposure is very slight."

All persons who worked in the building while the renovation work was in progress have been advised in writing of the AEHA findings and conclusions. Entries will be made in each person's medical record, documenting the facts of the incident.

Because AEHA believes the amount of individual exposure — although undetermined — would depend, at least in part, on how close people worked to the place where the asbestos was disturbed, individual work sites are being marked on a building floor plan that will be kept for record purposes.

The AEHA finding was the first "incidental exposure" documented in a Redstone Office area.

Asbestos is widely used in commercial products. Many school buildings, for example, have insulation containing asbestos as was the case in 5681.

Although all Americans are repeatedly involved in "incidental" exposures, the particular type of cancer caused by asbestos fibers most often has been associated with long term and repeated exposures such as occurred among workers who installed asbestos insulation in ships.

AEHA also inspected five other buildings on post known to contain asbestos. Three MMCS class buildings, 3303, 3305 and 3307 have insulation believed to contain asbestos in hallway ceilings. The material is widely used in the two arsenal boiler plants, Bldgs 3625 and 4725. Insulation believed to contain asbestos has also recently been identified around a heating unit in Bldg 4500.

Facilities Engineer has a continuing program to either cover and seal or remove insulation believed to contain asbestos.

Allotments help AER campaign

Allotment forms that allow active duty military and retired military to check off what amount they want deducted from their pay for Army Emergency Relief are expected to boost the AER fund drive.

"We anticipate a successful fund drive due to these allotment forms because of the convenience of using them," said 1st Lt. Eric Borg, the 1981 AER fund campaign's project officer.

This year's local campaign started April 9 and will continue through June 1. Borg said the new system of allotment forms "seems to be very, very encouraging and very, very helpful."

The minimum deduction for AER can be $1 per month for three months. The maximum time for deduction is 12 months and the maximum amount is unlimited.

Civilians can make donations to AER by cash or check, Borg said.

Campaign coordinators from the various Army organizations and project offices met April 9 to start the postwide drive. Missile and Munitions Center and School (MMCS) and Special Troops have also held kickoff meetings.

As of last week, the Systems Development Office with Army Missile Lab had completed its AER fund drive.

Juanita Phillips, the local AER officer, and 2nd Lt. Cynthia Garrett, chief of personal services, conduct the AER program for Redstone Arsenal. Contributions can be made by contacting Phillips at 876-5468.

AER has adopted the theme "People Helping People" for the 1981 fund drive. Last year AER provided Armywide more than $10 million in emergency assistance to active and retired soldiers and their families.

Top priority

Question: I would like to know what General Moore believes MICOM's number one priority is.

Answer: Here's his response:

"If the Reagan administration's new defense budget is adopted, MICOM will have an enormous amount of money to spend in a short time . . . We've got to do that right. The integrity of our system depends on it. If I heard right at our performance management conference, integrity is our number one value as an organization. Well, our integrity is on the line.

"The Army has told the American taxpayers that we need to improve readiness as soon as possible. These additional dollars are being provided for that purpose. The number one priority of this command must be to obligate them correctly with full responsibility to gain that which we contract for, and with the understanding of our contractor partners that that is our full intent.

"We need good cost control, good contractual control and we need to monitor the outcomes with reference to the increased readiness we will provide this nation's soldiers through expenditure of those dollars. The American taxpayer should ask for no less and our professionalism should require no less.

"What I hope does not happen is that we have to work everyone far beyond their capacity to get that done. I hope we can pull together . . . with everyone understanding the desired outcome and working toward it . . .

"And as we have to work hard, very hard, our work-place environment is very important. So it may cost us a little more energy, particularly if it gets hotter, because we'll have to have the air conditioning on.

"We may spend a little more gasoline getting coordinations accomplished faster, might have to burn the lights a little longer, and maybe bring on a few more people . . ."

The trashing of the arsenal

A trip into the arsenal's out-of-the way places at this time of year is an eye-opener.

Signs of spring's greening are everywhere — trees leaving, wildflowers and dogwoods blooming, streams running strong and clear.

But the overwhelming impression you get is of trash.

Take a steep, winding dirt road to the top of Weeden Mountain. Amid the buds and blossoms hang a man's blue trousers from a tree limb.

On adjoining Madkin Mountain, from the highest point on the arsenal you can see for miles on a clear day but need look no farther than your feet to see that this scenic overlook has become a popular partying place.

Stop by the fishing holes. They're strewn with bait boxes and beer cans.

In a meadow pasture the warmth that has brought up the field flowers has also brought out the flies blowing a pile of household garbage that has been dumped there.

At the edge of a woods road you'll find a big pile of scrap from an arsenal shop.

At some point way back in the arsenal's history someone came up with a novel idea: Let us designate April 20-25 as Spring Cleanup Week. Let it be a post-wide campaign with everyone involved in an effort to stop littering and clean up what is there.

But as with all novel ideas, the new eventually wore off and Spring Cleanup Week became another one of those tired campaigns that seem to roll around here untiringly as people know from reading tired stories announcing them year after year in this newspaper.

Has Spring Cleanup Week outlived its usefulness? You might think so if the part of the arsenal you see is that part where litter patrol scooters and mowing machines seem to compete for space on cosmetically maintained grounds.

But take a look around the part of the arsenal where they don't pay people to pick up trash and manicure the grass. There you can see in living color the cumulative effect of the casual trashing that the arsenal gets every day.

It makes you think that perhaps Spring Cleanup Week is a concept whose time has come again after all these years, instead of one that's outlived its usefulness.

New office to assist handicapped

A special office to help handicapped people experiencing problems on the arsenal has been established in Facilities Engineering Directorate.

Redstone Facilities Engineer Paul Hancock set up the handicapped assistance office in his production control branch and put G. B. Fisher in charge.

Hancock said Fisher has been empowered to cut red tape and take direct action in "facilities" matters involving the handicapped and will work with occupational health and other agencies in matters beyond the engineers' scope.

Hancock wants the office to function as, in his words, "a trouble desk" for handicapped people to call "if they're experiencing problems anywhere on post — in the work environment, in community services such as the PX or commissary, in their quarters, in the recreation areas, anywhere."

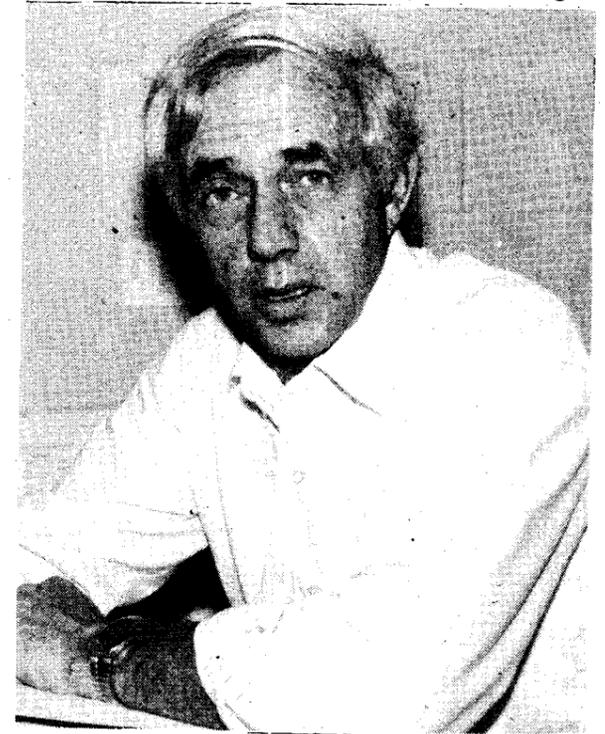

An immediate goal of the new office is to obtain stickers for military residences here that will inform firefighters or other emergency personnel that there may be a handicapped person within.

Fisher pledged to handle all requests for assistance "by first finding out exactly what the need is and then, get moving." He may be contacted at Bldg 7613, DRSMI-KPW, telephone 876-1023. He is being assisted by Dave Brown, FE production control chief.

Hancock said the aim is to make sure that handicapped people at Redstone are not "handicapped for lack of something we could do for them."

"If it's legal and at all feasible, we'll do it for them," he said.

Fisher said anyone aware of a workplace problem affecting the handicapped should report it to him, confidentially if they desire.

Gasoline prices lower than average here

People who buy gas at the Post Exchange gas station here may be saving more money than they think.

Under a new pricing procedure, they can get up to seven cents off the average offpost price. The limit was two cents off before the change in March.

This does not mean that the PX gas prices are the lowest in town. PX officials take the average offpost price of 20 service stations within a 15 mile radius.

"When you take a community average, somebody's price is going to be cheaper," said Joe Robinson, Exchange manager for Redstone Arsenal.

The PX, after getting an average price of 20 stations, subtracts the product cost for obtaining the gasoline. This gives a "projected gross margin" which must equal or better the "dispensing cost."

How much more the gross margin is than the dispensing cost determines how much the PX can cut off the average offpost price. For example, if the gross margin is 24 cents more than the dispensing cost this means a seven cent discount.

PX officials determine offpost averages to figure their gas prices once a week. The new system was started in mid-March by Maj. Gen. Duane Stubbs, commander of the Army and Air Force Exchange Service (AAFES).

The old pricing system meant AAFES service stations could only cut two cents off the average offpost gas price for self-service and only three cents off the average for offpost full service.

The PX station here, completely self service, offers slightly lower prices than it could under the old pricing system.

"I think it does mean the prices are lower because instead of two cents below, in most cases we're three right now and in some cases four," Robinson said.

Prices last week at the PX station were

Everett Madden fills up at PX station

$1.349 for regular, $1.410 for unleaded and $1.473 for super unleaded.

"We haven't had a big (price) increase in just a long time," said Roger Overcast, automotive activity manager. "Right now it's pretty stable. Gasoline prices are pretty stable at this time."

The "last major change" occurred when President Reagan decontrolled prices of petroleum products on Jan. 28. The price for regular was $1.209 a gallon at the beginning of January, Overcast said. That was 14 cents less than what it was last week.

The PX gets its gasoline from Gulf Oil out of Birmingham, Ala. Other post exchanges may use other gasoline companies.

Robinson expects to continue hearing complaints from people who don't understand that the PX gas prices are based on the average offpost price.

"This is one of the biggest problems we have in the PX," Robinson said. "People don't understand why the service station downtown might be lower."

Is the Servicemen's Group Life Insurance adequate for your needs?

Sp5 Charles Nunley, Co. A — "Yes, I feel it is. It's a good, affordable life insurance program that's beneficial to the soldier."

PFC Alice Morgan, 7th S. C. — "It's not too expensive and I guess it's enough for somebody after I die. But I think it could be a little bit more. I'd pay a higher premium for more life insurance."

Sgt. Danny Griffin, 515th Ord. Co. — "The SGLI is alright. I don't need anymore. I think it's an honest program and it's good for people to have insurance — whether they're single or married."

Pvt. 2 James Horvath, 6th S. C. — "The SGLI is the only insurance I have and all I think I need. Some people buy more, but I don't really need that much."

Pvt. 2 Kermit Lowery, Co. B — "I think it's alright. With inflation the way it is, it could offer a little higher coverage. But I think it pretty well takes care of the requirements of military personnel."

Sp4 Bruce Hailey, HHC — "It's enough insurance for me, especially considering the military way of life. The price is good, and it saves your family a lot of problems."

Redstone soldiers go to OCS

On Monday, two Company A soldiers began training in the Officer Candidate School at Fort Benning, Ga.

If all goes well, Jeffrey T. Zimmerman and Gregory W. Kendall will be commissioned second lieutenants in July. At that time the former specialists 5 will join the growing number of Redstone soldiers who have exchanged stripes for bars.

According to Jean Manley of the arsenal's Compact Military Personnel Division, it is rare for an O.C.S. class to start without a soldier from Redstone.

Although the application process is lengthy, and the course itself is often referred to as one of the Army's most challenging, the number of hopefuls is growing.

In a recent interview, Manley said that eight soldiers applied in 1980. Eight have already applied this year. Six applications are awaiting review at Department of Army level.

Manley is optimistic regarding the DA review. She said, "Our selection rate has been very high. Of the eight applications forwarded last year, only one was not selected."

The Department of the Army selection board is the final administrative hurdle soldiers must clear on their way to O. C. S. A lot of paperwork is necessary to get that far.

Although the individual soldier doesn't have to fill out all of the paperwork, he is responsible for assembling his application package and submitting it through his chain of command.

The package must include three letters of recommendation, the individual's birth certificate, transcripts of his civilian education (60 semester hours minimum), a DA Form 61 (Application for Appointment), DA Form 483 (Officer Preference Statement), DA Form 4322R (Army Officer Candidate Contract and Service Agreement), a signed statement that he meets Army height and weight standards, and an official, full length photograph.

The package also include the results of the Officer Candidate Test and the Officer Qualification Inventory, the soldier's General-

Technical (GT) score, his security clearance, and the results of a recent physical readiness test.

When that is assembled, the applicant is interviewed by his commanding officer. When the results of that interview are added to the package, the soldier is ready for the arsenal's monthly O. C. S. interview board.

If two of the board's three members recommend it, the soldier's packet is forwarded to the department of the Army.

At least one Redstone soldier followed this process, successfully completed O. C. S. and is now serving here.

2nd Lt. William S. Kelley first came to Redstone as a private. He remained to become an instructor in the Improve Hawk Launcher Repair Course. As a specialist 5 he was the 1979 Post Soldier of the Year.

Now he is the executive officer of the 4th Student Company.

He recalled, "The paperwork was frustrating, and the course at Benning is about the most challenging thing I have ever faced. It's not something I would volunteer to do again.

"But it's worth it. Not just for the tangible reasons, either. The first time they pin the bars on you, before you see any change in your pay or any other benefits, you know in your heart it was worth it."

EO program evaluated here

The Missile Command's equal opportunity program was to be evaluated this week by senior equal opportunity NCO.

Sgt. Maj. Julius C. Williams, the equal opportunity senior NCO in the Army's Materiel Development and Readiness Command, was scheduled to visit here from DARCOM headquarters in Alexandria, Va.

He said he would arrive here April 20 and leave April 23.

Williams was to make "an assessment" of MICOM's equal opportunity program. He will be "looking at the program in general and giving assistance where possible," he said. "What assistance they need if they need any."

This is his first visit to Redstone Arsenal. He is scheduled to visit all the Army commands this year.

"I normally get to visit each command once a year," he said. "It's just MICOM's time."

Williams, the acting EO staff officer for about a year, said he supervises the Army EO program within DARCOM's office of EO. He has been an equal opportunity NCO in DARCOM for the last five years.

'I sincerely tried to help people'

BY SKIP VAUGHN

Bob Fletcher is a busy man — especially since his reelection as president of Local 1858 of the American Federation of Government Employees.

He welcomed a visitor into his office at the temporary union headquarters one day last week. A stack or two of telephone messages set before him on his desk along with other paperwork.

"Now that they're organized — what the hell do we do?" read a cartoon displayed on one wall. A framed AFGE "certificate of affiliation" adorned another wall and a chalkboard with writing stood in a corner of the small office.

Fletcher, 58, thought to himself for a few seconds when asked what he attributes his reelection to. "Maybe I attribute to the fact that I have sincerely tried to help people over the — not (just) the past two years but the past 10 years," he said. "And maybe a lot of them remembered it and voted."

He recalled the story of a doctor who once attributed his own election to the fact that he had delivered several babies over the years.

"I don't attribute it to anything except maybe I have always tried to say yes to people and tried to see what I could do about it," Fletcher added. "I don't have any ego about it. They certainly didn't owe me anything as far as I'm concerned.

"But I appreciated it. And I appreciated their show of confidence in me."

Fletcher

He won his second two-year term as union local president in an election April 13, receiving enough votes without a runoff. Herbert Ivey, a painter with Facilities Engineering Division, was elected executive vice president. Tom Paul, a counselor in the Human Resources Development office, was elected sergeant-at-arms.

Fletcher's plans for the union are what he calls the four "ations": Organization, Negotiation, Representation and Federal Employee Legislation. "When you get down to it, that's the force," he said. "That's what I intend to push."

He hopes to increase the membership of the union from 1,500. "There's a potential of 5,000 unsigned up members out there and that's what I mean by organization — increasing the membership," he said.

Fletcher, who holds a journalism degree from Florida Southern College, easily slips into legal and governmental terminology when describing his four "ations." He has obtained a major in para-legalism by attending Samford University in Birmingham at night.

The GS-12 equipment specialist in the Pershing Missile Section of Maintenance Directorate has been a federal employee for over 20 years. "I was a 1083 tech writer for 19 years of that," he said.

Fletcher came to work in January 1961 with the old Army Ballistic Missile Agency. He was remarried last February and has a son who is an attorney in Memphis, Tenn.

He talks about the lobbying battles that will take him to Washington for union business in June. "The challenges I face are being able to effectively protect the rights of the employees and see that they get the consideration and opportunities and benefits to which they're entitled," he said.

MPs, National Guard participate in carnival

The military police crime prevention unit from Redstone Arsenal will display field and garrison MP equipment Saturday at the "Pixie Pizazz" 81 children's carnival.

Sp4 Jerry Trahan, Sgt. Randy McClure and other members from the crime prevention section are to distribute badges to the children naming them "Redstone Arsenal junior military policemen."

Also, members of the Army National Guard's 20th Special Forces group headquartered in Huntsville will put on a demonstration of rappelling from a helicopter.

The carnival is an annual event of the Cahaba Shrine Temple for crippled, burned and handicapped children in North Alabama. It will be held from 12 noon till 3 p.m. at the Shriner's park on Pulaski Pike at Winchester Road in Huntsville.

There will be a carnival midway with games and refreshments booths and "show and tell" displays featuring National Guardsmen, police officers, firefighters and the Madison County Sherriff's Posse.

Miss Wheelchair Alabama Gwendolyn Chandler of Auburn will take part in the event. She will be escorted by Pittsburgh Steelers football great John Stallworth.

A Shrine spokesman said that crippled, burned or handicapped children who have not received an invitation to the event can obtain one by calling 859-4470.

Rape investigated

The Redstone CID agency is investigating a rape that reportedly occurred in a barracks room here.

Maj. Rudy Segaar, MICOM deputy staff judge advocate, said a Company A soldier was arrested in connection with the April 10 incident and released to the custody of his unit.

The rape is alleged to have taken place in the victim's barracks room in Bldg. 3435 late at night.

Sanction

The restrictive sanction — the first ever imposed by local Army officials for alleged housing discrimination — means soldiers can visit the premises but cannot enter into contractual arrangements for renting or leasing.

Soldiers who violate the order could be punished under the Uniform Code of Military Justice, article 92, for violation of a general order. The maximum punishment by general court-martial would be dishonorable discharge and two years confinement at hard labor, according to the Staff Judge Advocate's office.

James C. Lewis of James Lewis Realty of Birmingham, Ala., owns the Mayfair apartments, according to a woman who identified herself as the realty company's bookkeeper. She said Lewis also owns Stratford Square Apartments in Winter Park, Fla.

Top BMD official honored on retirement

BY MARSHA TAYLOR

William O. "Bill" Turney can claim the distinction of spending more than $8 billion during his career as a government employee — and now the Army has given him its highest civilian award for doing so.

At retirement ceremonies marking the end of 30 years of federal service, Turney was presented the Army's Decoration for Exceptional Civilian Service.

The last 22 years of Turney's career was devoted to the Ballistic Missile Defense Program — the Army's only strategic weapons program and the nation's only program for developing an active defense against attacks by strategic ballistic missiles.

In presenting the award, Maj. Gen. Grayson D. Tate, Jr., the Ballistic Missile Defense program manager, said, "This is one award that is not easy to come by. And I can't think of anyone that deserves it more than Bill Turney."

In 1963 Turney became Chief, Contracts Office the BMD program and in 1976, assumed additional duties as the commanding general's Executive Assistant for Management and Administration.

The award culminated a week of tributes to Turney and his service to the Army. More than 275 current and former BMD employees attended a dinner in his honor.

The Huntsville Chamber of Commerce also hosted a dinner for him.

Tate described Turney as "one of the strong backs of the BMD organization that has carried a lot of the load."

Over the years Turney played a key role in the management and administration of the BMD organization. He joined the anti-ballistic missile development effort during the early days of Nike-Zeus and saw its evolution through Nike-X and Sentinel.

During the 1970s, he was instrumental in negotiating major contracts for the Safeguard System, the free world's first operational BMD system — and for its subsequent deactivation.

More recently, his leadership has contributed to the successful completion of a Terminal Defense Validation program, which gives the United States on-the-shelf technology for a next-generation BMD system that can be developed and deployed if required.

Turney has also been responsible for contracting for the support of Kwajalein Missile Range (KMR) in the Marshall Islands.

Turney took personal interest in the relationship between KMR and the people of the Marshall Islands. He was considered by two successive U. S. administrations for appointment as High Commissioner of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, which includes the Marshalls and five other districts.

Looking back over his career which began in a Redstone Arsenal warehouse in 1951 and ended in an executive, supergrade position, Turney commented: "The Army has been extremely good to me, and I'm proud of the BMD Program."

He regrets leaving just when the BMD research and development effort to which he has devoted so many years is on the upswing again. "The command has a real challenge in front of it," Turney said, but he's confident that it has the leadership and the workers to meet and fulfill the challenge.

A native of Morgan County and graduate of Cotaco High School, Turney has a law degree from LaSalle University in Chicago and an MBA from the American Graduate University, Covina, Calif.

"BMD is here to stay," Bill Turney told well-wishers at his retirement ceremony. That may be so, but many who think that it won't be the same without him.
