Defense and industry join in 'streamlining' quest

BY ED PETERS

Under a "streamlining initiative" established in the Defense Department, developing agencies will be concerned more with how a weapon should perform and less with how it should be built.

Intended to simplify, speed up and introduce economies into the acquisition process, the initiative is a DOD answer to a public and Congress who believe that weapons are too expensive and that nothing is being done to cut costs and curb waste.

DOD's perception now is that acquisitions that are not streamlined will not be approved by Congress.

Those and other points were made here last Wednesday by the "streamlining advocates" of the military services and an industry representative in a presentation arranged by the Defense Systems Management College's southern region office.

"Streamlining," said Roy Greene, the Army's advocate, "is any action we can take to reduce the cost and time of a weapon system acquisition while maintaining or improving on product quality."

Commercial products included

Commercial products that will or can be made to work in military applications are part of the streamlining concept. Another part is an examination of test requirements to make sure they are not excessive or duplicative.

Officials have targeted the elimination of "overspecing" and unnecessary contract requirements such as contractual "how-to's" as an important element of the streamlining process.

These "counterproductive" requirements, said Brent Hardesty, a McDonnell Douglas executive representing the Council of Defense and Space Industry Associations, also include prescribed management systems, premature requirements, "untailored" military specifications and standards, and accidentally referenced documents.

Hardesty, who describes the streamlining initiative as a process of "removing barriers to productivity... any action taken to prevent counterproductive requirements from being in contracts...," noted that the hugely successful F-4 jet fighter was built in 1955 with only two pages of performance requirements from the Navy. In time, in some cases the paperwork for a weapon system came to be measured in boxcar loads.

"Pyramid" referencing of specifications greatly complicates the acquisition process.

An initial tier of 300 specifications can pyramid to 30,000, according to Hardesty.

In one instance, 161 entries referenced a second tier numbering over 5,000 that included the federal specifications for grocery sacks and curled animal hair, along with the military packaging standards for submarine repair parts.

The problem is partly one of habit, in that contracts and requests for proposals tend to be written rubber stamp-fashion by copying old ones without an understanding of the specifications and requirements they contain.

Scrub and tailor

Military and defense officials agree that specifications and like requirements are good and necessary but not always properly used and applied. They propose a scrub-and-tailor solution — "scrub" each requirement with the user to ensure that it is specific and necessary, and then "tailor" specifications, limiting their scope of application and being specific on performance.

A principle of the streamlining initiative is that "Detailed specification of the technical approach and design features prior to development inhibits trade-offs which are necessary to achieve overall system objectives such as affordability, producibility, reliability and supportability. Both contribute to suboptimum designs and unnecessary costs."

Streamlining should begin when the user comes to the developing agency with a requirement. "We've got to develop a questioning attitude to that requirement", asserted Greene, the streamlining advocate. "Do you really have to have that?" is a good question to ask, he said.

Developers, in turn, will concentrate on defining the weapon's mission and performance and go to industry with "a requirement telling them what we want done, not how to do it," Greene said, and solicit comment on the appropriateness of specifications and requirements.

Requests for proposals will be sent out in draft form to allow industry to comment on specifications and requirements before they become part of a contract.

Hardesty said program managers must let industry know that it is OK to question and that streamlining is now a part of winning. "Industry is fearful so far" of losing contracts, he said.

The streamlining concept is in the process of being "institutionalized" within DOD with the publication of a directive and handbooks, said Greene, who is on the staff of Army Materiel Command's deputy chief of staff for research, development and acquisition. In conjunction with streamlining, AMC has established a four-year development goal for new starts, he said.

SNACKING — A banana seems to make a good snack for this ground hog who is a frequent visitor to building 5678. Symnett King, a supply cataloguer in the logistics data management division, shot this picture of the animal that has been known to visit other branches in the building located near a wooded area.

Not guilty plea entered

BIRMINGHAM — A MICOM officer pleaded not guilty to two counts of converting government property to his own use when arraigned in federal court here Oct. 17.

Lt. Col. Dicky A. Love is scheduled to be tried in federal court here the week of Dec. 2. He was indicted by a federal grand jury in September for offenses that allegedly happened in the Spring of 1981.

Love is a special assistant to the commander of the Redstone Arsenal Support Activity.

Driving under the influence carries high price

Driving under the influence poses an unnecessary danger and can mean a fine, loss of driving privileges, and possibly jail time.

Courts in Alabama, including magistrates court at Redstone, have the discretion of fining someone from $250 to $1,000 for first offense DUI. Another option is a jail sentence of not more than one year.

Also state law provides that the first-time offender's drivers license be suspended for 90 days and that he or she be required to complete DUI school. The school is "primarily an educational program aimed at deterring future misconduct," explains Capt. Steven Aldridge, prosecutor in the staff judge advocate office.

"What the judge may do on a first offense is very discretionary for him. He can do as he pleases. The facts speak for themselves that he's giving a very stiff fine or he has in past cases," Aldridge says. He points out that the judge here has been giving a $400 fine.

For driving under the influence, Alabama has what is known as enhanced penalty scheme. "What that means is that for every additional or subsequent conviction within five years, the penalty is mandatorily increased," Aldridge says.

The penalty for second conviction within five years carries a fine of from $500 to $2,500. There is an additional requirement for 48 hours in jail or community service of at least 20 days. Generally, second-time offenders get the jail time. "Sentences where the community service provision is imposed are rare," Aldridge says. He adds that reasons for this include problems of supervising the individual, and finding him or her an appropriate place to do the community service.

On the third or subsequent DUI conviction within five years, the person is fined from $1,000 to $5,000 and sentenced to from 60 days to a year in jail. Also state law provides that the drivers license be revoked for three years.

"People don't realize that when we talk about this period of time your license is suspended, that precludes you from driving to work and that can cost people their jobs," Aldridge says. Unlike some states that make allowances to allow people to retain the privilege of driving to work, Alabama suspends the license for all purposes. "It's hard luck but that's the way it is," the prosecutor adds.

At Redstone people who are charged with DUI have their post driving privilege suspended. Once they are found guilty, a letter is issued that revokes their post driving privilege for one year. If they violate that one-year rule, their privilege can be revoked for five years.

This is how the system works here: Someone caught driving under the influence goes to federal magistrates court that is held monthly on post. If the person pleads guilty, he or she will be sentenced in magistrates court. If the person pleads not guilty, he or she can be tried either by a judge in magistrates court or by a jury in U.S. District Court in Birmingham.

"The danger posed by drunk drivers" is the most important reason for avoiding driving under the influence, according to Aldridge. "It (DUI) is unnecessarily dangerous. There's no reason for it," he says.

Secondly, the penalties for DUI are severe, the prosecutor adds. People who are caught suffer financially and could lose their jobs. "It's a high price to pay," Aldridge says.

F&A officials celebrate 'New Year's' in October

BY SKIP VAUGHN

The signing of fiscal year-end reports is like New Year's in October for the Finance and Accounting Division.

Two levels of reporting are done: Installation level and general operating agency level. The MICOM comptroller signed the 42 installation level reports and the commanding general signed the 12 general operating agency reports.

Data certified includes the amount of funds received, funds issued, commitments, obligations, unliquidated obligations, orders received, earnings, and unfilled orders for the fiscal year ending Sept. 30.

"The reports represent the yearlong professional effort of the finance and accounting division to account for the monies provided," said Robert Richard, an F&A systems accountant. Richard, of the policy, procedures and systems office, coordinated certification of the reports. "The actual work was done by the finance and accounting branch sections," he said.

Dollar figures reported are in the billions. In 1984 the Missile Command had $4.051 billion in disbursements— money paid out. In 1985 the figure was $4.566 billion. MICOM had $5.082 billion in obligations— money it agreed to pay out—in 1984. In 1985 the command had $5.454 billion in obligations.

This is how the funds flow: The Department of Army allocates money to the Army Materiel Command; AMC sub-allocates programming funds to the Missile Command; and MICOM allots money for this installation. "And then the reporting flows back the same way," Richard said.

The installation level reports cover the various appropriations. These include research and development test and evaluation, operation and maintenance, family housing management, military construction, procurement, foreign military sales, Army industrial fund, and Army stock fund. These reports are certified by the finance and accounting branch chief and then by the finance and accounting officer, Maj. Michael Lamb. They are certified next by the comptroller, Col. George Laslo.

"We take the various installation level reports and we consolidate them into general operating agency reports," Richard said. "And then the general operating agency reports are submitted to the U.S. Army Finance and Accounting Center and the Army Materiel Command."

The reporting system is a yearlong effort. Reports are submitted monthly but are certified as of Sept. 30 each year. Although it has been updated several times, the original law requiring certification was passed by Congress in 1954.

The purpose of the reports is to "manage, control and account for the funds provided MICOM," Richard said. Maj. Gen. Peter Burbules signed two general operating agency reports on Oct. 10 and the remaining 10 on Oct. 16.

This certification represented the closing of the fiscal year books for the approximately 350 military and civilian people in the Finance and Accounting Division. They held a "New Year's" party the night of Oct. 11.

"These reports are the official statement of the financial activity at MICOM," Richard said. "It assures that the funds appropriated by Congress were expended according to the intent of Congress."

SIGNING — Maj. Gen. Burbules signs year-end report as Col. Laslo and other finance and accounting officials look on.

MICOM awards $44.7 million contract

The Missile Command has awarded $44.7 million to Honeywell, Inc., to buy the AT-4 Lightweight Multipurpose Weapon for both the Army and Marines.

Weighing 14.6 pounds and 40 inches long, the AT-4 is a shoulderfired recoilless weapon for use against light armor and material. The AT-4 was judged the overall best in late 1983 of six foreign and domestic systems in a competitive test and evaluation of all available light antiarmor systems.

The AT-4 is produced by the Swedish firm, FFV, and marketed in this country by Honeywell.

The Army is buying approximately 55,000 rounds this year and has the option for additional multiyear procurement.

MICOM's Advanced Manportable Weapon System project office coordinates and manages AT-4 activities for the Army and Marines. Col. Robert T. Walker is project manager and James Hughes is his civilian deputy.

The AT-4 earlier this year completed development tests at Aberdeen Proving Ground, Md., and operational tests at Fort Benning, Ga.

The system performed well in more than 1,100 firings.

General Maxwell Thurman, Chief of Staff, United States Army, takes his hat off to Kristen Ellis, 6, the 1985 March of Dimes National Poster Child. Kristen, of Hebron, Ky., represents the quarter-million babies born each year with birth defects. The March of Dimes Birth Defects Foundation works to prevent birth defects through programs of research, medical services, and education.

Volunteer's caring led the way to 'little brother'

(The annual Combined Federal Campaign is under way. The following is an account of one worker's involvement with a community assistance program.—Editor)

BY PAM ROGERS

At least one Redstone worker has found an organization which allows him to give his time to someone who needs it. In return, he has a friend.

Alan Calvert, an engineer at the Missile and Space Intelligence Center, became a Big Brother last year.

Big Brothers/Big Sisters of Madison County is a United Way agency which provides role models to children between the ages of 5 and 17 from single parent homes. Calvert had thought about participating in the program for several years, but it wasn't until he graduated from college that he could seriously pursue the idea.

"I saw it on TV—the Wednesday's Child segments. I have a friend who's a Big Brother, and I like kids.

"Basically the program is set up to help the child, but I've gotten just as much out of it," he said.

Calvert's Little Brother is B.J. Williams, who's 8 years old and a third grader at Jones Valley Elementary School.

"B.J. is very inquisitive—he's always asking questions, and sometimes I don't know the answers. But we like each other, and we participate in a lot of activities. He's very sports oriented," Calvert said.

Some of the things they like to do include playing baseball, building flying rocket models and going to movies.

"We went to the Space Dome on Sunday, and we went camping a couple of weeks ago," he said. B.J. plays soccer, and Calvert is a spectator at the games when his schedule permits.

"I hope I'll have some impact on his life, that I'll provide him help to make decisions later on," he said.

B.J. doesn't mince words when it comes to describing his friendship with Calvert. "It's great," he said.

He especially enjoys playing in racquetball with his Big Brother.

B.J.'s mother, Marilyn Williams, enrolled him in the program because she felt he needed a male role model.

"He needed someone who could do things he wanted to do that I wasn't equipped to handle. It's real nice to have someone to do the things little boys dream about," she said.

While B.J. is with his Big Brother, his mother spends time with Allison, B.J.'s 13-year-old sister. As a single parent, she finds it difficult to give both children the time she believes they need. The Big Brother program helps by giving B.J. a friend he can do what his mother calls "boy things" with— things like sports, ball games, and camping trips.

"From all I know of Alan, he's an extremely dedicated, hardworking, earnest young man. I hope that B.J. will pattern himself a little after Alan— work hard, but have time for people," said Williams.

B.J. is one of 98 children who are currently matched with a Big Brother or Big Sister. There are 150 other children in Madison County waiting for a friend like his. The list contains the names of 111 boys.

BROTHERS — Alan Calvert and Little Brother B.J. Williams enjoy spending time together, whether going to a planned activity, or just talking.

Tyler Sanderson, executive director of the agency, said the reason there are so many more boys than girls waiting is because more women have custody of their children than men, and fewer men than women volunteer for the program, since women in our society are raised to be more nurturing.

Big Brothers/Big Sisters receives 18 percent of its funding from the United Way, which in turn receives funding from the Combined Federal Campaign.

"Most of our operating expenses go for salaries and insurance. Our insurance costs are just astronomical, because each match must be insured," Sanderson said. In addition to his position, the salaried staff includes two social workers.

"Eighteen percent may sound low, but we're only going into our third year as a United Way agency. We're not as established as some of the other agencies," he said.

It's not particularly complicated to become a Big Brother or Sister. Each applicant must consent to a background investigation, including personal and professional references, and a nationwide police record search. There are a few requirements. Volunteers must be over 18, have their own car and auto insurance, and must be willing to give three to five hours of their time each week.

Social workers will interview the volunteer at the agency's office, and again in the volunteer's home. After the screening process is completed, the volunteer is able to choose a friend from the three to five potential matches selected by the social worker. Matches are based on background, interests and personalities, so the amount of time it takes to make a match can vary from a month to more than a year.

Big Brothers and Sisters in Madison County range in age from 19 to 74, and come from all walks of life, said Sanderson.

"We're just looking for compassionate, caring people," he said.

Hunter gets first deer on opening day of season

Bow hunting season for deer opened Oct. 15, and on that day an arsenal hunter bagged his first deer.

Cpl. Guenter Poeltl, a member of the German Air Force Detachment, killed the deer with a 30 yard shot when it came near his stand. The four point buck weighed 100 pounds, said Shelby Williams, director of Outdoor Recreation. "That's a pretty good sized buck for this area," she said.

Deer season lasts until Jan. 31. Hunters may use guns to harvest deer beginning Nov. 16. Here are some other hunting season dates for 1985-86: The first split of dove season lasts until Saturday. The second split runs from Dec. 14 through 30. Squirrel season began Oct. 10 and lasts until Jan. 18. Hunting season for rabbits and raccoons began Oct. 15 and ends Feb. 28. Quail may be hunted from Nov. 20 through Feb. 28. Animals can be trapped from Nov. 20 through Feb. 20. Duck season runs from Dec. 5 through Jan. 13.

Everyone who hunts on Redstone Arsenal must first take a hunting safety course which lasts about 30 minutes, Williams said.

"Classes are held Mondays and Wednesdays, except holidays, at 5 p.m. here (building 5132), and the Learning Resource Center has it on computer, and you can take it Monday through Friday from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m.," she said.

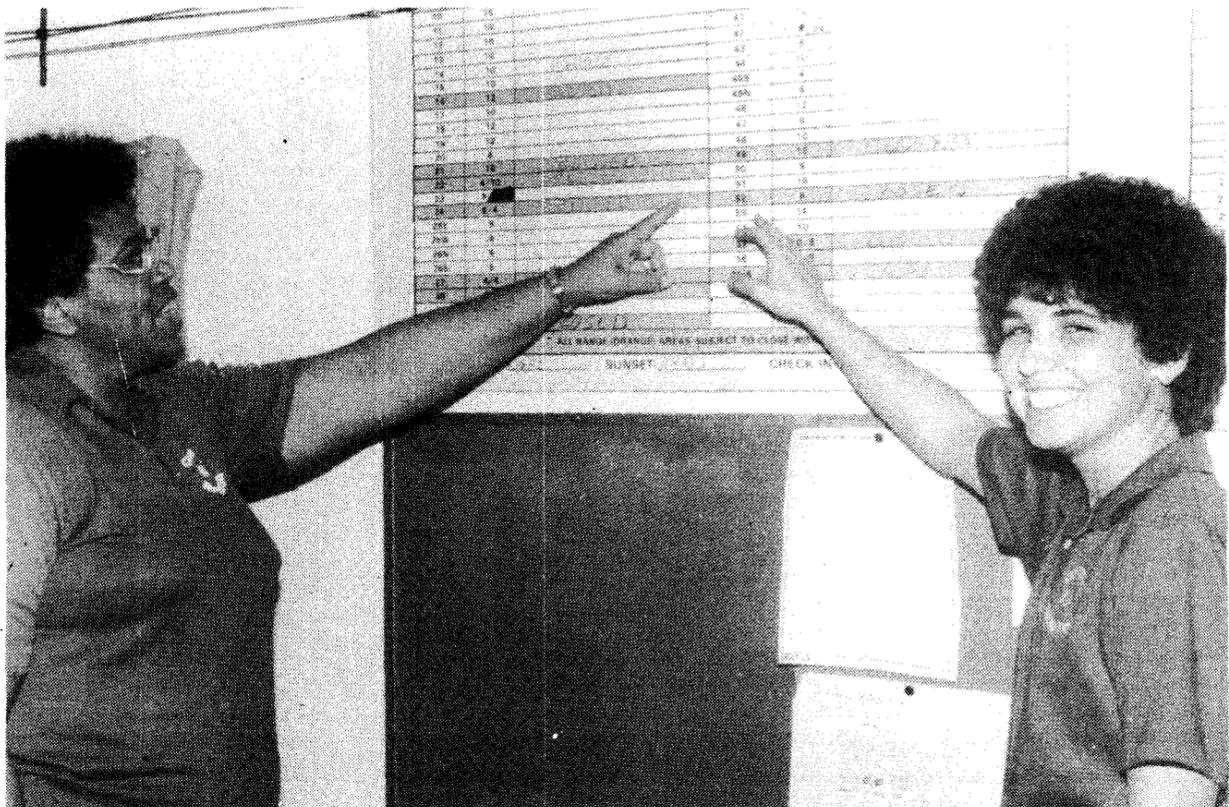

Hunters must have an Alabama hunting license, which can be purchased at outdoor recreation for $11. State fishing licenses can also be bought there for $7. In addition to the state license, hunters must have a Redstone hunting permit, which is free.

Those eligible to hunt on the arsenal include active duty military personnel and their guests, government civilian employees and contractors with access badges to Redstone.

Hunter registration is open from 7 a.m. to sundown seven days a week. When gun season for deer starts, the building will be open from 4:30 a.m. till sundown on Fridays, Saturdays and Sundays.

Rental hunting equipment is available to military hunters. "They can check out shotguns, bows, orange vests— any equipment they need for hunting," Williams said.

She stressed that before any hunters can obtain a Redstone permit, they must take the safety course. The course must be repeated each year. For more information call 876-HUNT.

Women's teams join civilian basketball league

A league for men 35 and older and a league for women have been added to Redstone's Civilian Welfare Fund basketball competition.

The season starts Oct. 28 when the 34 and under men—and older guys who can compete with them—begin their games.

"We're improving every year. I think this 1985-86 basketball league will top any one we've had so far," said Abdullah Muhammad, CWF basketball league president.

The biggest change is the addition of a league for civilian and military women. A survey was conducted in July and August and the response was enough to encourage a league for women players. "So far we have approximately 38 women players," Muhammad said. "That's a little short in trying to field six teams. So we want some more to ensure we have enough players."

A survey wasn't necessary for men's 35 and over "slow" league. "We had I think 12 or 13 teams last year and we had about three or four teams out of the 13 teams who just couldn't compete with the younger guys," Muhammad said.

He has a list of eight teams in the 34 and under fast league and five teams in the 35 and over slow league.

"We've got a restriction on who can play and how many can play," Muhammad said. There is a maximum of 15 players per team for all the leagues. Up to four military people can play on each team in the two men's leagues (no limit on military members of women's teams). Up to two contractor workers can play on each team in all the leagues. There is no fee for playing.

This year's budget for CWF basketball is $6,680. So far expenses have included $616.40 for rule books for officials, basketballs, score books, ball bags, a ball pump, a set of needles, and a first aid kit; $207.68 for gym supplies; and $19.05 for locks and a chain for the gym door.

In addition to the budget, some $2,176 in work was done on the gym floor in early September with the approval of the Civilian Welfare Fund Council, Muhammad said. The games are played in the old post gym, building 5663.

The men's 34 and under league opens its season Oct. 28; the 35 and over league starts Oct. 29; and the women's league opens play Oct. 31. The season continues into January and final tournaments are planned.

League officers include Muhammad, president; Pete Anderson, vice president; Dewitt Palmore, secretary-treasurer; Stan Williams and Leonard Luqman, staff assistants.

"It's too late to sign up a team because we already have the schedules made up. If you want to play on a team, you have until Jan. 1st to sign up," Muhammad said. "That's the cutoff date as far as adding players to a team." To sign up, call Muhammad 876-4195 or 837-8855 or call Palmore 876-1261.

LEAGUE LEADER — Abdullah Muhammad, a security guard, is CWF basketball league president.

B Company program reaches out to community

BY SKIP VAUGHN

B Company plans to expand its program of getting involved with the community.

For the past six months, soldiers in the unit have been taking on outings the children of a child placement agency, the Harris Home for Children. The soldiers' spouses have been taking part along with former members of B Company. The effort is called the Outreach Program.

"The plan is to continue the Harris Home effort but in addition to that we want to diversify and become involved with some of the other organizations in Huntsville," said Capt. Willie Brazile, commander of B Company.

Outings for the Harris Home children have included swimming, bowling, exercising at the post gym, and skating. Soldiers voluntarily take part. "We've had quite a bit of participation within the unit," Brazile said. Some former members of his company who were transferred to A and C companies still wanted to participate so they were allowed to continue in the program, he added.

"They enjoyed it so much they wanted to continue to work with the kids," Brazile said.

On Saturday, Oct. 12, the soldiers went skating with about 35 Harris Home boys and girls. The soldiers took their spouses and children along too for the outing at the Rainbow Skating Arena on Arcadia Circle. "We had a pretty good time," said Brazile, who praised the Rainbow management for their generosity.

B Company tries to have an activity once a month for the Harris Home children. "We've taken them bowling; to the gymnasium to play basketball, lift weights, racquetball, that sort of thing. We've taken them swimming (where) we had a big barbecue," Brazile said.

The idea is to get the B Company soldiers directly involved in community services in Huntsville and to show their concern and willingness to share their time and efforts.

"Since the program began we've received a lot of praise and appreciation from the director of the Harris Home," Brazile said. "The kids are overjoyed by our assistance and the time we're devoting to them and they grasp every opportunity to go on an outing, whether it be bowling or swimming or whatever. They always look forward to us coming.

"I'm appreciative of all those who have joined in to make the program a success," he added.

And the people at the Harris Home appreciate the soldiers' help, too. "The children are children who come from deprived situations, many of them are abused situations," said Lorraine Miles, director of residential services at Harris Home. "Their (the soldiers') activities with them— it's something the children love, it benefits them. It's almost like a big brother type situation although it's done in a group setting. They're just doing so much to help our children and you just really don't know how much we appreciate it."

THE SOVIET POTENTIAL IN RESPONDING TO THE AMERICAN STRATEGIC DEFENSE INITIATIVE

The aim of this 40-hour course is to outline the data available now with regard to Soviet research in the area which is roughly comparable to that of the American SDI effort. The course will describe problems of modern Soviet military R & D, and possible Soviet responses to the American initiative.

Nittany Lions picked to devour Mountaineers

BY SKIP VAUGHN

Penn State will try to continue its unbeaten record when West Virginia visits this weekend.

The Nittany Lions are 6-0 with wins over Maryland, Temple, East Carolina, Rutgers, Alabama and Syracuse. The West Virginia Mountaineers meanwhile are 4-1-1 with wins over Louisville, Duke, Virginia Tech and Boston College, a loss to Maryland, and a tie with Pittsburgh.

Penn State has improved since its 17-14 loss to the Mountaineers last year. The pick here is... Penn State.

Skip's Picks delivered a 25-10-1 record last week, bringing the overall marks to 168-62-5 for 73 percent. Here are this week's picks for selected games in major college football:

- West Virginia at Penn State— Penn State by 7.
- Alabama at Memphis State— Bama by 7.
- Mississippi State at Auburn— Auburn by 14.
- North Carolina State at Clemson— Clemson by 7.
- Duke at Maryland— Maryland by 21.
- Virginia Tech at Florida— Fla. by 14.
- Florida State at North Carolina— FSU by 3.
- Kentucky at Georgia— Georgia by 14.
- Georgia Tech at Tennessee— Tech by 3.
- Louisville at Miami (Fla.)— Miami by 24.
- Vanderbilt at Mississippi— Vandy by 1.
- South Carolina at East Carolina— East by 4.
- Virginia at Wake Forest— Virginia by 7.
- Boston College at Cincinnati— BC by 10.
- Wisconsin at Illinois— Illinois by 14.
- Indiana at Michigan— Michigan by 21.
- Iowa at Northwestern— Iowa by 14.
- Oklahoma State at Kansas— OSU by 7.
- Kansas State at Missouri— Missouri by 3.
- Michigan State at Purdue— Purdue by 10.
- Ohio State at Minnesota— Ohio State by 7.
- Colorado at Nebraska— Nebraska by 30.
- Southern Cal at Notre Dame— ND by 7.
- Colgate at Army— Army by 21.
- Pittsburgh at Navy— Pitt by 14.

- Temple at Syracuse— Temple by 3.
- Utah at Air Force— Air Force by 14.
- Arizona at Stanford— Arizona by 7.
- Arizona State at Washington State— ASU by 3.
- Houston at Arkansas— Arkansas by 14.

- Texas Christian at Baylor— Baylor by 21.
- Texas A&M at Rice— Texas A&M by 7.
- Texas at Southern Methodist— Texas by 3.
- Brigham Young at Texas El Paso— BYU by 30.

Learning becomes lifestyle for many

WASHINGTON — It's one thing for a person to view education as a tool for quality of life improvement. But society today, with its advancing technology, rapidly changing information base, and increasing demands on knowledge and experience, is adding a new dimension to the role of education.

The new dimension is called "lifelong learning" — a philosophy the Army sees as a way "to make good soldiers better through education," said Army Education Chief Col. Bruce A. Battey. "Learning is a lifelong experience; and, for many, it rapidly is becoming a lifestyle."

Education in the Army proceeds on the personal and professional levels through programs and courses ranging from remedial and refresher courses to graduate studies. "Changes are coming about at an ever-increasing rate, and the professional must keep learning — just to stay even with the profession," Battey said. "With this in mind, we no longer seek to just satisfy a soldier's personal educational goals. We must keep the Army's goals and objectives foremost in mind. If we are to have an Army ready to fight and win, education no longer can be simply "nice to have."

Working to prevent curtailing tuition assistance programs has proved to be Battey's most rewarding experience thus far. "That money is important to many soldiers, as we found out. After the cuts were initially announced, the Army staff was flooded with mail — all negative, I might add. A recent survey of educational aid recipients at public and private colleges revealed that low-income families (earning less than $15,000 annually) must pay at least half the costs of sending children to college, even with tuition grants," he said. That annual cost can average from $5,000 at a public institution to $10,000 at a private school, the report says. "The Army helps cut those costs with tuition assistance and other financial benefit programs, such as The New Army College Fund. We aim to keep those promises," Battey said.

Adult learning

Battey puts two tasks at the top of his list of challenges: to continue to develop the Army's adult learning program as a solid foundation for training, improved leadership skills, and morale; and to instill the concept of lifelong learning into every soldier and leader.

"Development of a strong adult learning program Armywide allows us to take marginal soldiers and to provide them with the specific academic skills they need to assimilate professional skills required to perform their military duties effectively," he explained. "That can mean a few hours to refresh old skills or several weeks learning new academic skills. However, I want to be quick to point out that a soldier can learn only so much in such a limited time."

He concedes that the connection between education and leadership may not be readily evident, but it does exist. A recent National Science Foundation research project outlines leadership factors directly attributed to education: competency, commitment, ability to develop strategies and self-organization, and knowledge. "All these are key to building strong leaders," Battey said.

In Battey's view, the concept of lifelong learning needs to be considered by everyone. "As the United States leads the way into the age of information, the fact of 'one career—one lifetime' is disappearing. Also, the increasingly rapid turnover of information available in nearly every professional field will force people back to school just to keep up with the changes," he said. Research shows that up to 50 percent of how much a person can earn in a lifetime, as well as more than 50 percent of a person's productivity, depends on one's knowledge gained through formal education, job experience and training. Unfortunately, only a small part of this knowledge is transferable to a new career with a new employer, which means the person will need more education and specialized counseling," Battey emphasized.

Recent survey

Results of a recently conducted morale, welfare and recreation survey show that nearly 50 percent of active duty soldiers have taken part in an Army Continuing Education System program or course at their current installation. Some 20 percent were in college-level programs and 16 percent in job-related courses. "The satisfaction rate also was high, with nearly 90 percent rating the programs good or average in every case."

Education is continuous, and so is the Army's plan for improving what is available. Battey cites three programs on his current agenda; one is already underway and the other two are being tested. According to Battey, these programs are aimed at awarding college credits for military experience, reducing the time away from the job and improving language skills.

The Army/American Council on Education Transcript Registry System is a pilot program undergoing validation testing at eight posts in the states. It provides soldiers with a transcript of their formal Army training and experience and is written in terms that college registrars and prospective employers will understand. Battey feels that this program will make it easier for soldiers to receive college credit for their overall Army education.

Another program now in a testing stage is the Job Skills Education Program. Battey says that this program standardizes and streamlines teaching basic academic abilities. This program will identify a soldier's specific weak areas and will provide a course of study that will strengthen those weaknesses. "It's designed around the specific academic abilities the soldier needs to perform effectively on the job," he said. Subjects taught can be as simple as rounding off numbers, improving spelling or speaking, or can become as complex as learning trigonometric functions. The length of this course depends on the soldier's ability; by zeroing in on a specific subject, the time away from the job should be reduced, he said. Field testing is now on-going at three installations: Fort Lewis, Wash., Fort Leonard Wood, Mo., and Fort Riley, Kan. If the testing succeeds, the program gradually will be implemented, beginning in fiscal year 1988, until it is Armywide, Battey said.

English as a Second Language training is a pre-basic training course that is now taught at the Defense Language Institute's English Language Center at Lackland Air Force Base, Texas. Battey feels that by giving English language classes earlier in a soldier's career the Army will have a stronger language program, while eventually reducing the need for such courses later in their military career.

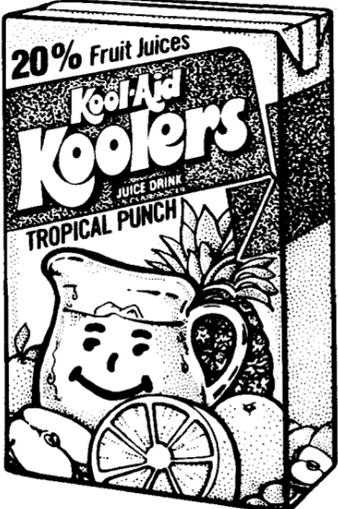

"Our sole purpose is to improve soldier's educational opportunities, while focusing on the Army's goals and objectives as the basis for developing new education programs," he said. (Arnews)

'Bounty' seekers brave 110 feet to net 'Pandora'

For Luis Marden, it was a natural sequel to the romantic story he had been following, and sometimes helping write, for more than 30 years.

As a writer-photographer for the National Geographic, Marden had discovered the remains of the Bounty, scene of the most famous mutiny in history, in 1957, four years after his research for the ship began. Now retired, he wears cuff links fashioned from two of the Bounty's bronze nails.

The metal fittings of the English merchant ship lay under six fathoms of South Pacific water off Pitcairn Island, where Fletcher Christian and his mates had burned it in 1790 after rebelling against Capt. William Bligh the previous year.

An aroused British Admiralty dispatched a warship, the Pandora, to capture the 14 mutineers who had remained on Tahiti and return them to London for trial. On its return trip in 1791, the copper-clad ship struck Australia's Great Barrier Reef and sank.

Australians find ship

Two Australian divers found the Pandora in 1977 under 110 feet of water near the tip of Cape York in northern Queensland. Excavation began in 1983.

Last year, Marden joined the Australians for three weeks and made 14 dives to the Pandora's wreckage, from which hundreds of artifacts have been recovered.

It was a climactic voyage for the veteran adventurer. "I am the first to lay hands on both sunken ships of that tragic story," Marden writes in the October National Geographic.

On his last dive, he carried with him a nail from the Bounty to compare it with the Pandora's fastenings. The ship's copper sheathing rests on the sea floor, its edges stippled with a line of nail holes.

"I thrust Bounty's polished bronze nail into one of the empty holes," Marden writes. "Against the umber alga-sheathed plates the golden nailhead gleams like a small sun. Bounty and Pandora have met at last."

The Queensland Museum of Brisbane is excavating the Pandora, using about 20 diver-specialists directed by Ron Coleman. "Pandora is now the most important wreck in the Southern Hemisphere," Coleman told Marden. "Her association with the Bounty story arouses wide interest, but what is more important, she is a rich storehouse of Navy life in the 18th century. We shall be working here for several years."

"They've just scratched the bottom," Marden said in a recent conversation. He estimated that a decade of work remains to be done on the Pandora. Still undiscovered, but apparently lying some 20 feet below the seafloor, is the bulk of the Pandora's hull, probably intact.

Turtles interfere

On their arrival late last year — summer in the Southern Hemisphere — Marden and the pilot of an amphibious plane were forced to land five miles away, because the waters near the wreck were filled with hundreds of huge sea turtles swimming toward Pandora Cay to lay their eggs.

Diving master T.C. Good explained to Marden, who has been diving since World War II, the riskiness of the dives to the Pandora — in deep water, against strong currents, with strenuous work at the bottom, and no recompression chamber on the diving vessel. Marden writes that "we relied on extreme caution and oxygen."

Artifacts from the Pandora were entered on a com-

In 1957 Marden discovered the Bounty, whose 1789 mutiny is notorious in sea annals. Volksmarch set for Nov. 9 on post

Plans are being finalized for the first IVV sanctioned volksmarch to be held Nov. 9 at Redstone Arsenal.

This year's march is the first formally sanctioned by the IVV, or the International Federation of Popular Sports, and is being sponsored by the Redstone Stompers and the Morale and Welfare Activities of Redstone Arsenal.

Volksmarching originated in Germany several years ago and, translated into English means 'people walk.' The volksmarch is nothing more than a leisurely walk routed through woods, forests, or other scenic or historic areas as a way to appreciate the beauty of nature and promote good health.

As the tradition goes, members of the community would get together and set up a 10 to 20 kilometer course (6.2 to 12.4 miles) and then celebrate at the finish of the walk. The volksmarch has been increasing in popularity and has begun to spread across the United States so that now clubs such as the Redstone Stompers are being formed.

This year's march will start and finish at the NCO Club, building 1500. Starting times will be from 8 a.m. to 1 p.m. for the 10K, and 8 a.m. to noon for the 20 K. The march will end at 4 p.m.

Everyone who registers and completes the volksmarch course will receive a silver or gold medallion depending on the distance completed. Special awards will be given to the youngest and oldest marchers, and the two largest civilian and military groups.

The registration fee for the volksmarch is $3 if you pre-register, or $4 the day of the event. For more information or to register contact Outdoor Recreation at building 5129, or call 876-4868/6854.

BMD tennis teams win their divisions

Both Ballistic Missile Defense tennis teams playing in the Huntsville Industrial Tennis League won their respective divisions of C-3 and D-3. A total of 72 industrial, independent and government sponsored teams were entered in the nine HITL divisions.

In addition to winning the team championship for their division, members of the D-3 BMD team were also HITL tournament winners in the following: John Troup won the singles title for this classification and was on a winning doubles team with Dan Pollard for group 3 in D-3. Steve Rogers and Les Rogers won the group 1 doubles in D-3 division.

Trophies for the winning teams were distributed at the HITC banquet on October 18.

Plan to keep cooking fires from becoming house fires

We expect the unexpected. If we're smart, that is. That's why we carry a spare tire in the trunk, budget for the unplanned expenses and keep the dog on a leash. Planning ahead keeps little problems from turning into big ones.

A cooking fire is one of those problems that almost everyone experiences at one time or another. If you know what to do, a small flare-up in a pan of grease is a little problem that's quickly snuffed out. If you don't know what to do, or if you panic, it could turn into a very big problem.

Kitchen fires often become home fires. Fires started by cooking account for about 20 percent of fire deaths. And countless people manage to put out small cooking fires, but not until they've suffered burns or damaged their kitchens by using unsafe methods.

Watch what's cooking

Many cooking fires begin when food is left unattended on the stove. A person leaves the kitchen for a moment, then gets distracted. The supply of distractions is almost unlimited: the telephone, the children, the television, household chores. Back in the kitchen, the food overheats and begins to burn.

Never leave food, especially grease, unattended on the stove. Even if you do return to it in just a minute (and how often does that happen?) that's enough time for a grease fire to start and spread. Turn off the burner any time you leave the kitchen.

Keep an eye on a pan of grease even while you're in the kitchen. If the grease starts smoking, it's hot enough to burn. Turn down the temperature.

We all grow complacent about the hazards we live with every day and the stove is one of those hazards. We know that burners get extremely hot, but how often do we set potholders, recipes or dish towels on the stove while rushing to prepare a meal? It only takes a second for these flammables to ignite.

Special caution is needed with lightweight flammable items. Paper napkins or light wrappings such as the papers used to package meat can be blown onto the burners by a breeze or fan. Fringe on dish towels can ignite merely by brushing lightly across a burner.

Keep flammables away from stove

The setup of a kitchen is also important for fire safety. Paper towels, cookbooks, flammable decorations or curtains above or near the stovetop provide a path by which a small fire can spread. Keep them a safe distance away.

Children will try to climb on anything to reach cookies or whatever else they want, so it's wise not to store tempting goodies above the stove. A climbing or reaching child could touch a hot burner, or worse, spill a pan, causing a scald or fire.

Curious children might also grab the handle of a pan on the stove. Handles should be turned away from the front of the stove but not over another burner even if there are no children in your home. A hurrying adult could also bump a handle that's not turned inward.

Most kitchens are full of small appliances. Never forget that your coffee maker, blender, toaster oven and all those other modern conveniences carry enough electricity to start a fire. Pull the plug on heating appliances when you're not using them. And keep all appliances, including larger ones such as the refrigerator, clean and in good working order. Inspect cords for damaged insulation. Never cut the third prong off a plug that has one — it's necessary for grounding.

If you have a gas stove, remember to turn the pilot off before using any flammable liquids in or near the kitchen. Many cleaning products, liquid adhesives and paints may give off flammable vapors, which can be ignited, causing a flash fire. Always ensure plenty of ventilation when you use these products, since even a spark from a refrigerator motor can ignite the vapors.

For some of us, housekeeping is the first thing to be neglected when we're busy. But even if you don't mind a mess in the kitchen, it can create fire hazards. Clutter around the stove can easily catch fire or add fuel to an otherwise small one.

Grease on the range itself — around the burners, or in the oven or broiler — can ignite. Clean it off before it builds up. If your stove has a fan above it, keep that grease-free too. Otherwise a small fire in a pan could ignite it.

Even with all precautions, a pan of grease will sometimes flare up. If you learn ahead of time what to do, you can stop the fire before it grows out of control, without injuring yourself in the process.

Don't touch that pan

The absolute worst thing you can do with a pan of burning grease is pick it up. If the pan remains on the stove, the fire is confined to a small area, and you can escape if it starts to spread.

Add a margin of safety to your life.

If you pick up the pan, you'll fan the flames, increasing the fire's intensity. And once you're carrying the pan, the flames can ignite anything in their path, including your clothes or hair. If the pan could become too hot to handle. You'll drop it, splashing burning grease over yourself and the room.

Pouring water on a grease fire will probably do more harm than good. Burning grease will splatter just as any oil will when you throw water on it.

Tossing baking soda on a fire is not recommended. By the time you find enough baking soda, the fire will most likely have spread.

Even if you have plenty of baking soda right at hand, it's tough to toss it properly from a safe distance. It will probably not be effective, and meanwhile the fire will be growing.

So what would you do? Leave the pan where it is. As long as the fire is contained in the pan and there are no flammables nearby, you have a moment to collect yourself and act.

First, turn off the burner.

Then, slide the lid on the pan.

It's that simple. It's even easier if every time you have a pan with grease in it on the stove, you get out the pan's lid and place it on a counter near the stove. If you know exactly where the lid is, you won't have to waste time searching for it and you'll be less likely to panic.

If for some reason you haven't taken this simple precaution, and the lid isn't handy when the fire starts, you can use a cookie sheet, another pan or any non-flammable item that will completely cover the pan and smother the flames.

Remember that after you've extinguished the fire, the grease is still very hot. Putting the lid on the pan snuffs out the fire by cutting off oxygen — it doesn't significantly reduce the temperature. Allow time for the grease to cool before beginning to cook again. And set the burner lower this time.

Oven fires

If a fire starts in the oven, turn off the heat, leave the oven door shut, and wait a few minutes to see if the fire dies out. If the fire continues, you can fight it only if you have an appropriate fire extinguisher.

Don't open the oven door any more than necessary when checking for fire or extinguishing it. Opening the door will let oxygen in to feed the fire. And stand well back when you open the oven door at all — hot air, smoke and flames may rush out.

A home fire extinguisher gives valuable extra protection from grease fires or any small fire. The days when using a fire extinguisher meant struggling to flip a heavy, bulky cylinder upside-down are past. Today's fire extinguishers are lightweight and uncomplicated.

A Class ABC fire extinguisher is the best buy for the home. Grease fires are Class B (flammable liquid) fires. But other kinds of fire could develop in your kitchen, or a grease fire could spread to another material. An all-purpose fire extinguisher can handle Class A (ordinary flammables — paper, upholstery and such) and Class C (electrical) fires as well as Class B.

Choosing an extinguisher

Be sure the extinguisher you buy bears the mark of a recognized testing laboratory such as Underwriters Laboratories (UL) or Factory Mutual (FM). Buy the extinguisher from a reputable dealer, learn how to care for it, and remember to recharge it after every use or if the gauge indicates pressure is down.

Fire extinguishers come in a variety of sizes. The extinguisher's label should indicate its relative usefulness for each kind of fire, for example, 2A-10BC. The higher the number, the more firefighting capability. The minimum recommended rating for a home fire extinguisher is 1A-5BC.

Bigger extinguishers can generally fight bigger fires. But choose a size that everyone in your home can handle easily — except children. They shouldn't try to fight fires — they should get out.

As soon as you have the extinguisher, everyone should learn how to use it. It's hard to read directions carefully when a pan of burning grease is threatening to set the wallpaper afire.

Mount near the door

Mount your fire extinguisher in a wall bracket near the kitchen door. Don't put it near the stove or some other place where a fire would be likely to block your reach. Always fight a fire with your back to the door so you'll be able to escape if the fire gets out of control.

If you successfully extinguish a fire it's a good idea to call the fire department anyway. They can check for smoldering within nearby walls or other situations that could lead to a flare-up later.

Use judgment about fighting a fire. If it's already severe or spreading, don't waste time trying to control it. Home fire extinguishers are very effective at combating small fires such as those in a wastebasket or stove, but they simply are not made for putting out large fires.

If you decide you can't fight the fire (and don't hesitate to make that decision if you're not certain that you can put it out quickly), leave the kitchen. Close the door behind you to slow the spread of smoke and fire. Then get everyone out of the house. When that's done, call the fire department.

Chain Saw Safety

Chain saws can be used for many purposes — cutting firewood, clearing land or trimming trees. Chain saws are powerful tools that can save hours of hard work. Because they are powerful, they can be dangerous if not used with care.

Before you begin your cutting job, if you are a new chain saw owner, thoroughly study your owner's manual. Even if you are an "old hand" with your chain saw, you should review the owner's manual if you don't use your saw often, or if you are using the saw to do something you haven't done before.

Following are some general safety tips when using your chain saw:

- Avoid fatigue, it can lead to accidents. Rest frequently before you feel tired.
- Avoid kickback. Keep the work area clear of other branches and objects.
- For safety, don't work alone — use the buddy system!
- Carry your chain saw safely with the engine/motor stopped, the guide bar and chain saw pointed behind you, the guide bar sheath on and keep the muffler away from your body.

- Be sure your body is clear of the natural path that the saw will follow after completion of the cut.

- Turn off the saw and be sure the chain has stopped before making any adjustments or repairs.

- Keep the chain sharpened and under proper tension.

- Never rest or attempt to start your saw on your leg. Start it on the ground!

- Always hold a running saw with two hands.

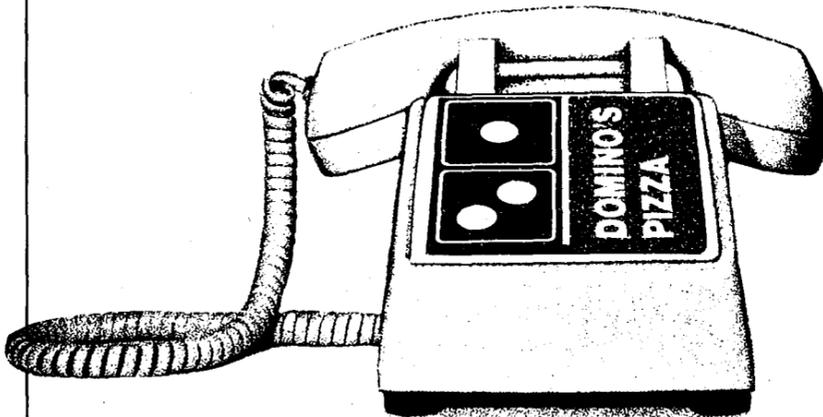

- Wear protective clothing — hard hat, safety goggles, sure-grip gloves, hearing protection and safety shoes.

- Always turn off the saw and allow it to cool before refueling.

The Consumer Product Safety Commission estimates that of the 125,000 people who are injured each year using chain saws more than half need emergency medical treatment, and in 1984 there were approximately 64,000 accidents and 17 deaths resulting from chain saws in the United States.

Any tool powerful enough to slice through trees and thick branches can do the same to human flesh, so chain saw injuries are usually serious or fatal.

Best commissaries selected

WASHINGTON — For the first time since 1976, more than one commissary has been named the Army's best for 1985.

This year's winners are: Fort Campbell, Ky. (large); Rock Island, Ill. (small); and Baumholder (large) and Heilbronn, Germany (small).

There were four winners because judging criteria changed. According to Bill Harding, a supervisory commissary management specialist in the Troop Support Agency's Directorate of Commissary Operations, "Overseas commissaries couldn't really compete (with commissaries in the states) in the past because of differences in operations such as the procurement of goods." Harding also said that small commissaries were previously at a disadvantage because they "don't have the additional customer services common to large commissaries."

All 139 Army commissaries compete annually for the awards which are designed to recognize outstanding facilities and promote effective operations and employees' interest in their work. Criteria includes customer service; cash control and procedures; store, grocery, meat, produce and warehouse operations; inventory procedures; care and use of equipment and operating supplies; administration; personnel management; employee courtesy; and physical security. Foreign Area Officer Program smaller, more difficult

WASHINGTON — A plan has recently been approved to identify volunteers for the Foreign Area Officer Program earlier in their careers while making entry into this program more demanding.

Foreign area officers serve as attaches, security assistance officers and political-military analysts on high-level staffs.

According to Maj. Bruce E. Boevers, an action officer with the FAO proponent team in the Pentagon, "Officers will be selected earlier in their careers, soon after their basic branch qualification. That's after four or five years on active duty instead of waiting, as is now done, until an officer's eighth year of service."

"We are really trying to ensure that officers in the FAO program serve in both a FAO job and a branch job while they are majors. This allows them to be more competitive for advancement in the Army and better prepares them for future FAO assignments," he added. Boevers indicated that FAO assignments for some may be deferred so that the officer can be assigned back to his basic branch following the specialized training or possibly attend the Command and General Staff College.

"Our intention is to continue to improve the overall quality of the FAO program by raising the entrance criteria," he said. "First of all this is a volunteer program. Only those who really want to be FAOs will be in the program," he said. In addition, a Defense Language Aptitude Battery Test score of 90 will be required. A score of 110 will be required for some of the more difficult languages such as Russian, Chinese, Korean and the Arabic dialects, he added.

Boevers commented that each officer must have high enough Graduate Record Exam scores to get accepted at a qualified graduate school. A minimum composite score of 1,100 with a minimum verbal score of 550 will be required by the Army. Testing is an individual's responsibility, he added.

Boevers said that FAO education will continue to consist of four phases. The first phase will be a short introduction course at Fort Bragg, N.C. The 30-day course will focus on the requirements of the FAO program and will identify required skills for areas of study. Additionally, instruction on such topics as national security policy formulation and terrorism awareness are covered. This phase will be followed by language training.

According to Boevers, the language training will begin earlier than is now scheduled in the training process and take anywhere from six months to a year to complete, depending on the difficulty of the language. He noted that scheduling language training earlier will help to identify weak linguists who either can change to an easier language or be eliminated from the program. Earlier scheduling also serves to strengthen the officer's background in the language as he enters the third phase of training, which is graduate school.

It continues to be the responsibility of each officer to gain acceptance at a high quality graduate school for studies in their area specialties, he noted. Boevers said that the average length of attendance at graduate school is 12-18 months.

The final phase of FAO training consists of about 18 months of in-country training. Boevers explained that in the final phase, language skills can be refined while the officer studies the social, cultural and political background of his area. "Whenever possible, officers attend host nation military schools for structured in-region training," he said.

In the future the Army plans to trim the number of FAOs it will train annually and reduce the number of FAO positions Armywide. Boevers feels that this reduction, along with the stricter education requirements, will result in an improved FAO program to meet the needs of the Army. (Arnews)

Community center boosts quality of life in Korea

WASHINGTON — A new $4 million community center and lodge is planned for the Yongsan community in Seoul, Republic of Korea, and is expected to be completed by April 1988.

"The center will be a multi-use facility combining lodging, dining, recreation, meeting, and retail services," said Dwayne Mann, management assistant for lodging and hospitality with the U.S. Community and Family Support Center in Alexandria, Va. "It will provide affordable family transient billeting, dining and recreational facilities for all of South Korea."

The lodge will have 276 single and double rooms with separate bath facilities, microwave ovens and refrigerators. "These rooms will be ideal for families," said Mann.

Also in the complex will be three dining rooms offering specialty, family and fine dining, and a cocktail lounge. "Other features include a ballroom, several small meeting rooms, and a reading/social room.

Recreation facilities will include an indoor/outdoor swimming pool, indoor/outdoor tennis and racquetball courts, a weight room, sauna, jacuzzi, and an exercise and dance room. Also planned are a children's play area and wading pool.

"The facility will be available to active duty soldiers, their family members and guests, and visitors on official authorization orders such as temporary duty orders," said Mann.

Constructing the complex is another visible effort to support the Army families' quality of life," said Mann. "New jobs will be created for family members, but the number has yet to be determined. Also, room rates have not been determined at the present time," Mann added.

There are nearly 30,000 soldiers stationed in the Republic of Korea, with approximately 11,000 family members. "The Yongsan Community Center and Lodge will be a "community" or "all ranks" facility," said Mann. "Non-appropriated funds will be used to build the center," he said. (Arnews)

Members sought for gospel choir

The Gospel Choir at Bicentennial Chapel is seeking new members "interested in gospel music with a black emphasis", according to Isaac Laws, the choir's new director.

Laws emphasizes that the current choir members represent a variety of religious creeds. The choir particularly needs male voices. Music selections are Negro spirituals, black gospel, contemporary, and black gospel originals.

The choir rehearses on the second and fourth Thursdays of each month at 6:30 p.m. at Bicentennial Chapel and sings at the Protestant services on the second and fourth Sundays. Anyone interested in joining should go to a rehearsal or call 876-5707.

Director Laws has led choirs for churches in Palo Alto and San Diego, Calif. and for the Union Chapel Missionary Baptist Church and the Chelsea Second Cumberland Presbyterian Church in Huntsville.

'Sky' Austin wins slam-dunk title here

Redstone's own Doctor J's took to the upper heights of the post gym in a slam dunk contest held Saturday, Oct. 12.

When the dust cleared, Kennard Austin, the son of a sergeant major, stood—or soared—alone as the best slam dunker. Austin beat six others to claim the honor.

About 40 spectators watched as the seven men tried to see who could slam a basketball through a hoop with the most style. The "slamtastic" dunk contest had been open to men and women, according to SSgt. Matthew Terrill, NCOIC of the post gym.

"Out of the seven we gave them each three dunks, and they were rated on if it went in, or if they switched hands or whatever," Terrill said. He and Sp4 James Lee were the judges.

The semifinals narrowed the field to three: David Bruce, a military family member, Sp4 Sheppard Fritz of A Company, and Austin. They each dunked three more times. That left Bruce and Austin in a tie. "They only had one dunk to break the tie," Terrill said.

Austin's effort left no doubt as to the winner. "It was like, you know, the basketball player they call Sky," Terrill said. "It was outstanding, that last dunk.

He was flying through the air. It was an outstanding dunk. When he finished it, there was no doubt, the other guy would have to be stupendous to win."

Austin won a trophy for the 11:45 a.m. contest that lasted about an hour. More contests of this nature will be held for soldiers and military family members, according to Terrill. They will be announced and posted on a contest bulletin board inside the post gym.

Halloween preview set for Redstone children

Young military family members will have a chance this weekend to try out their Halloween costumes and check out the competition.

A Halloween party for children 12 and under will be held Saturday at the Recreation Center.

Mike Chemsak, director of the center, said the annual event is always a hit with kids, and since it's not held on Halloween, it gives children a chance to dress up twice. Trick-or-treating on post will be allowed Oct. 31 in the family housing areas between 6 and 8 p.m.

Boy Scout Troop 308 will be doing most of the work for the party. "We'll have a haunted house that will be good and scary, games, costume contests, and refreshments. Everything is free," Chemsak said.

He expects from 300 and 500 children to come to the party.

"Kids respond well and enjoy it a lot—especially the haunted house," Chemsak said. The ghoulish festivities will be held from 6 to 8 p.m. this Saturday. For more information call 876-4531.

Individually, 20,000 Redstone Arsenal employees earn an average salary of $435 a week. Collectively, each week these people swell the payroll to $8,500,000.

Of the 20,000 Arsenal employees, 16,000 are civilians and the remainder, military. Thus, about 80% of Arsenal employees support families off the base and are consistently good buyers.

Rocket advertisers each week see the good results the paper's advertising columns produce for the.

That $8,500,000 weekly payroll is plenty impressive but when you multiply that by 52...

$450,000,000 is Redstone's yearly payroll!

The Rocket would like to show you the path to that brimming bonanza!
