New civilian retirement system starts in January

WASHINGTON — A new pension plan for federal employees received presidential approval last week, putting an end to the three-year struggle to develop a retirement system to succeed the current civil service retirement system.

The Federal Employees' Retirement System, signed by President Reagan June 6 as Public Law 99-335, provides a mandatory three-tier retirement plan for some 56,000 civilians hired after December 1983. The system, scheduled to go into effect in January 1987, provides benefits based on Social Security, a modified civil service pension and an optional tax-deferred voluntary savings plan.

Employees currently under the old retirement system may voluntarily enroll in the new system during an "open season" scheduled from July 1 through Dec. 31, 1987. This includes employees with 5 years of service creditable under CSRS who separated after Dec. 31, 1983, and later were rehired subject to Social Security (as provided by temporary law). Employees who choose to remain under the Civil Service Retirement System will not be affected by any of the provisions of the Federal Employees' Retirement System, said Cecil Carlson, a civilian retirement officer with the Army's Civilian Personnel Center in Alexandria, Va.

Employees with less than five years under the Civil Service Retirement System who resign from federal service and are rehired within one year will be automatically converted to the new plan, Carlson said.

Employees covered by the Federal Employees' Retirement System will not only contribute to Social Security but also to a pension plan. They will contribute 1.3 percent of their salaries to the plan next year, 0.9 percent in 1988-89 and 0.8 percent in all subsequent years.

In addition, the new system offers employees a voice in how much additional money they want to put away for their retirement.

This flexibility comes from the new thrift savings plan. Even though combined Social Security and pension benefits under the new plan won't equal the current retirement benefits, employees under the new plan could actually surpass CSRS savings by contributing to one of three tax-deferred thrift savings plans, Carlson said.

The thrift plan permits participants to put up to 10 percent of their salaries into investments, with the government matching contributions of up to five percent. They can choose to put their money into any of the three following plans: — Government Securities Investment Fund; — Fixed Income Investment Fund (with options such as insurance policies and certificates of deposit); — and Common Stocks Index Investment Fund.

All of these options will have a fixed, although perhaps fluctuating, return that allows participants the opportunity to control their investments. To strengthen that control even more, the government will offer an open season at least twice a year when employees can move their savings between the three funds. "This will give employees the opportunity to shop around with their investment," he explained.

Under the new pension plan, the minimum retirement age will gradually be raised from 55 years to 57 years, with at least 30 years of credible federal service. Employees can retire at age 55 until the year 2003. After that, the retirement age will gradually rise until, in the year 2027, the minimum retirement age with 30 years of service will be 57.

Furthermore, the new plan would eliminate automatic cost of living allowance increases for retirees under age 62 and reduce the COLA to the current consumer price index minus one percentage point for retirees 62 and older.

The Office of Personnel Management currently is developing orientation briefing packages that will prepare agency personnel officials to educate and enroll employees in the new government program. Employees should have the opportunity to participate in an orientation program during September, October or November.

While newer employees might want to attend an orientation to gain a better understanding of their new retirement system, the "old-timers" should attend to compare the new plan with their current retirement system, Carlson said.

If employees under the old system decide to convert to the new, the assets in their CSRS account can be

Big family picnic promises 'fun for all' in July

BY SKIP VAUGHN

Like the old saying goes, the family that plays together— well, you know the rest. Each year, the MICOM family sets aside a Saturday for family fun and games.

This year's MICOM Family Picnic is set for July 19 (rain date July 20) at the civilian recreation area. Activities are planned for children, teen-agers, and adults in the spirit of the family "fun for all" theme.

Areas will be set aside for such things as entertainment, sports, teen activities, and children's events. The picnic this year is dedicated to the late Jere Ducote, who served as chairman of last year's successful event.

"Due to his efforts and how he ran the picnic last year, we were able to take a lot of his ideas and use them this year. And we anticipate it's going to be one of the most successful picnics in MICOM picnic history," said Bennie Robison, this year's chairman. He is an industrial specialist in Procurement Directorate which has responsibility for the picnic this year.

"With the assistance of the 23 committees working in the various areas, we plan to have activities for all," Robison said. Committees include everything from bingo to security.

Those invited to the free picnic include civilian and military members of MICOM, their families, MICOM civilian retirees, and their families. Robison points out that the Missile Command consists of about 8,000 people. "We anticipate half of those will attend," he said.

Food will be available "at a minimal cost," according to the picnic chairman. The food, catered by the NCO Club, is to include barbecue sandwiches, hamburgers, cheeseburgers, hotdogs, soft drinks, beer, Polish sausage, and potato chips. Food will be served at a central location in the recreation area, with some refreshments also available at the Rustic Lodge which is the site for bingo.

The picnic is to begin at 10 that morning and end at 4 that afternoon. The grand finale is the presentation of contest and sports trophies. First place trophies are to be engraved with "The Jere Ducote Memorial Award."

Planned sports include softball, volleyball, horseshoes, frisbee toss, golf shoot, and tug of war, a new event this year. First, second and third place trophies are to be awarded in each event except tug of war where one trophy will be awarded.

"In the major sports of volleyball and softball, we'll have an all tournament team," said Kenneth Gurley, co-chairman of the sports committee. He added that these tournament all-stars will receive individual trophies. By late last week, five volleyball teams and six softball teams had signed up.

June 30 is the entry deadline for the sports activities. Female participation is encouraged. "We really need 100 percent participation from women, it'll give them something to do while they're out here," said Denise Boone, a sports committee member. People to call to sign up for sports events include: Ron Hall (softball) 895-4991, Jane Daniel (golf shot) 876-4170, Bruce

Chief of staff answers tough questions

WASHINGTON — A new chief of staff videotape titled "Straight Answers to Tough Questions" is being mailed to installation commanders and general officers.

The 37-minute tape contains questions asked by students at the pre-command course at Fort Leavenworth, Kan. and answered by Gen. John A. Wickham Jr. The questions address safety, light infantry divisions, the regimental system, acquisition of the Sgt. York weapon system, the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings legislation, the role of the spouse in the Army, ambition and "jointness" (the advantages of the military services working together). The tape concludes with Wickham talking about leadership and the Army theme, "Values."

Because the tape touches on current topics that affect today's Army, it could be used for such occasions as officer and NCO calls, command breakfasts, and command and staff meetings.

Additional copies of the tape will be developed for distribution to local Training and Audiovisual Support Centers at a later time. (Arnews)

Protecting data

Editor:

Power outages and line fluctuations can really play havoc to data files on a single user or multiplex computer based system. Power failures and line voltage variations cannot be prevented down at the user level but the loss of valuable data information can.

We here at OMMCS-ETTD have a Cluster computer data based system which runs continually during duty hours. In the past four years there have been many power failures and severe voltage fluctuations and there has not been any loss of data because of these reasons. The main data base unit as well as the satellite terminals were so protected from this type of failure that not only was no data lost but no files had to be recopied.

We have had such a voltage problem that the lights in the office would dim very noticeably down and cause loss of data, but since the installation of a $10 component it was prevented from occurring again.

Copy reproduced at Army expense

Copying machines throughout MICOM are being modified to print the words "Reproduced at Government Expense" on each copy in an effort to curtail unauthorized use.

Col. John J. Walker, RASA commander, notified all organizational elements of the impending change last week.

As machines receive regular maintenance, a label will be placed under the glass of each so that the words will appear on the lower right margin of each copy made.

AER fund-raising drive exceeds goal

The Army Emergency Relief campaign here has exceeded its $36,000 goal.

By Monday, the final day for the drive, the total was about $39,000 and contributions were still being counted. "It ought to be about $44,000," said 2nd Lt. Carey Gormes, project officer for the campaign.

Most of the money came from the Ordnance Missile and Munitions Center and School. "It was a great effort by OMMCS and everybody else did a fantastic job," Gormes said.

The 4th Student Company passed 6th Student Company to become the top contributor to Army Emergency Relief at the school.

"AER is such a super program, I'm just glad the money was out there for it," said Capt. Kevin Riedler, commander of the 4th. "People were more than willing to give."

The 4th's total of $7,093 was the top unit contribution to the school's $30,034 figure, according to SFC James Good, who served as AER coordinator at the Ordnance Missile and Munitions Center and School.

The troops deserve the credit, according to Riedler. "We put out there that the AER drive was coming, and they donated," he said. The other 4th leaders include 1st Sgt. Thomas Avery and 1st Lt. Paul Haffey, the executive officer who served as the unit's coordinator for the fund-raising campaign.

"We didn't want to be number one, we just wanted to put money where it was needed," Riedler said.

frozen and retained as future retirement annuity. The money also can be withdrawn, but employees will forfeit the deferred annuity.

Those who decide to remain under the Civil Service Retirement System but would like to supplement their retirement savings also have an option. They can participate only in the thrift savings plan. While they will be allowed to contribute up to 5 percent of their salary, they will not receive any government contributions.

Once employees under the old system convert to the new, they cannot return to the Civil Service Retirement System. To help employees make the best choice for their future, the Army will offer employees access to computer programs that will enable them to estimate their potential retirement savings under the two systems, Carlson said.

The new retirement system will cost the government only 22.9 percent in employer contributions as compared to 25 percent under the Civil Service Retirement System. This difference is expected to result in a five-year deficit savings of about $6.3 billion, Carlson said. (Arnews)

Fulton (frisbee) 895-3393, and Boone (volleyball) 876-6195.

A variety of entertainment is planned for the picnic. There will be bleachers and a stage. People are also "welcome to bring their lawn chairs to pull up to the entertainment area," said Maureen Watanabe, entertainment committee chairman. New features include magician Russell Davis of Huntsville, the Lee High School choral group, and the Cedar Gap Blue Grass Band (with buck dancers). Mike Sheehy, audiovisual production officer in the technical integration office at the RD&E center here, returns as master of ceremonies. He is to have his Moonlighter's Band there. Other scheduled performers include the Barber Shoppers, Huntsville Concert Band, and Lee's Martial Arts College. "We're going to have a great time," Watanabe predicted.

Children's activities planned include frisbee toss, sack race, water balloon toss, soccer kick, children's volleyball, moon bounce, face painting, ball toss for helium balloons, pony rides and carriage rides. There will also be free snow cones.

Teen area plans include a disc jockey from WZYP-FM radio station, a dance competition with prizes, and an appearance by members of the Huntsville Stars baseball team.

A picnic dance contest will offer variety since "the MICOM family consists of many generations of people," according to Capt. Tony Bullock, chairman of the contest committee. To encourage everyone's participation, four categories were established—youth (break dance), teen (break dance), young adults (disco), and adults (jitterbug). Other contests include watermelon eating, casting for accuracy, and egg toss.

Among other features at picnic is the dunking booth, an old favorite at the annual affair.

"It's the only event of the year at MICOM that the whole family can participate in," said Robison, the chairman.

CHAIRMAN — Bennie Robison, picnic chairman, keeps a chart on progress of this year's picnic plans.

Army issues strict 'controlling smoking' policy

The Missile Command is joining the rest of the Army in moving toward implementation of a new anti-smoking policy.

The policy that takes effect in early July will ban smoking in all Army-occupied areas except those specifically designated for smokers.

A MICOM policy statement is going to be issued "with an effective date of 7 July like the rest of the Army," according to Lt. Col. William Katholi, deputy commander of Redstone Arsenal Support Activity.

"We're checking to see if AMC (Army Materiel Command) is going to put out any guidance, that's what we're waiting on now," said Katholi, who quit smoking five years ago.

Provisions of the 'controlling smoking' policy apply to all vehicles, aircraft, offices, buildings and facilities over which the Army has custody or control. Space assigned to the Army by the General Services Administration also falls under the provision. The policy will be included in Army Regulation 1-8, "Smoking in Department of the Army occupied buildings and facilities."

Army officials expect to enhance readiness through the policy by establishing the standard of a smoke-free environment. The senior leadership hopes to cause a mind-shift within the Army to think that "Smoking is the exception — not the rule."

Studies have shown that smoking reduces readiness by impairing physical fitness and by increasing illness, absenteeism, premature death and health care costs, according to the Army leadership. The 1985 Defense Department worldwide report on cigarette use by military personnel shows that 52 percent of the Army's 778,000 soldiers smoke, as compared to about 30 percent in the general public.

The intent of the policy, developed by the major Army commands and Army headquarters, is "to protect non-smokers and to encourage smokers to quit," said Maj. Jim Paige, a project officer with the Army's leadership division at the Pentagon.

The policy doesn't attempt to completely prohibit smoking. It provides for smokers by allowing commanders and agency supervisors to designate smoking areas, when possible, "to avoid undue inconveniences to persons who desire to smoke." Such designated smoking areas, however, must be confined to those places where the second-hand smoke can be sufficiently isolated to protect non-smokers from its effects.

Conference rooms and the other areas already designated as no-smoking areas under AR 1-8 will retain that status, according to the policy. Supervisors or commanders may not designate smoking areas within auditoriums, conference rooms, restrooms, gymnasiums, fitness centers and elevators.

The policy is broadly written to allow local commanders to develop their own policies tailored to their unit or installation. "If the policy were more specific, it would be too dictatorial," Paige said. "The commanders can set their own standards within the policy's guidelines, using a common-sense approach." This means that enforcement could be different from one installation to another.

The policy does provide specifics for enforcement in some areas, however. It specifies, for example, that smoking areas in dining facilities and other eating areas "shall be permitted only if adequate space is available for non-smoking patrons and ventilation is adequate to provide them a healthy environment."

It also addresses living areas. "When individual living quarters are not available and two or more individuals are assigned to one room, smoking and non-smoking preferences shall be considered."

Smoking by health care providers in front of patients, even while in a designated smoking area, is prohibited under the policy, too. Likewise, faculty, staff and visiting parents may not smoke in the presence or view of children in Department of Defense dependent schools and child development centers. Students may never smoke on school grounds.

Notices at the entrances to Army-occupied space will indicate that smoking is prohibited, except in specifically designated areas. Signs also will indicate those areas designated for smoking. Furthermore, ashtrays are not permitted in non-smoking areas unless placed at doorways so that smokers can put out their cigarettes, cigars or pipes before entering.

Soldiers, Army civilians and contractor personnel who violate the policy face administrative action. Other violators could be removed from or denied access to Army-occupied buildings. Tobacco smokers usually won't be punished under the Uniform Code of Military Justice, however, unless soldiers disobey a lawful order or regulation restricting smoking, and also pose a direct threat to safety or security, or knowingly disregard the health and comfort of others.

Smoking cessation programs and support groups for smokers are being established Armywide to help them overcome the need to smoke.

Cooperation pledged

Wildlife refuge in test range called 'dilemma'

Local Army officials have pledged cooperation with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service in finding ways to allow them to better manage the portion of Wheeler National Wildlife Refuge that is within Redstone Arsenal.

Col. John Walker, deputy post commander, told an F&WS group that immediate steps would be taken to grant them easier access to their property and promised to work with them in trying to resolve other problems.

Parts of Test Area 1 and Test Area 6 are on Wheeler Refuge property. About 4,000 acres of the game sanctuary are inside the boundary of Redstone Arsenal. Fish and Wildlife Service representatives came here last week to discuss what they call the "dilemma" of trying to maintain as wildlife refuge that portion of the refuge used by the Army for missile flight tests.

Among problems they aired were delays and difficulty in getting access to their property; inability to conform with their charter to promote public use of the property; and the "very limited benefit" the agency feels it derives from its lands within Redstone Arsenal.

Sam Drake, the F&WS district refuge supervisor in Atlanta, said the agency "would entertain working through the Corps (Army Corps of Engineers) for a land exchange" in which the Army could own the flight test ranges by trading land of equal value for them.

He said that having property inside the boundary of Redstone Arsenal is a situation that "doesn't fit in neatly with the goals and objectives" F&WS has for Wheeler Refuge.

"Our actions as an agency are greatly constrained as to what we can do for wildlife and fulfill our goals and missions on this land," he said.

A small agency (5,500 people managing 97 million acres), F&WS said environmental assessments it must perform whenever the Army expands on Wheeler Refuge property have been too large a burden. But Billie Storey, MICOM's test and evaluation director, assured them the Army has no more range expansion plans of consequence, "can almost live within the status quo with occasional exceptions" and specifically wants to avoid destruction of any more "greenery" since MICOM ranges are among few available where target sensors can be tested in a natural environment similar to Europe. "We need the grass, the trees and the creeks," he asserted.

Ironically, F&WS regards noise in the area as a plus instead of a problem because it repels wildlife that otherwise might come in contact with the DDT contamination in Huntsville Spring Branch and adjacent wetlands. "But if it weren't for that, we'd probably have a problem with the noise," Drake commented.

F&WS makes annual revenue sharing payments of $7 to $10 per acre on the land it lets the Army use. "We're making the revenue sharing payments with those benefiting being only those fortunate enough to work at Redstone Arsenal," he said, referring to the fact that people employed here are permitted to hunt and fish on the land but the general public cannot. F&WS wants its lands to be open to the public.

F&WS announced in May that it was concerned over the "cumulative loss of important fish and wildlife habitat" resulting from the use of Wheeler Refuge land by others and therefore was imposing a year-long suspension on issuance of special use permits for the 34,500 acre reservation's land and water areas.

Conference explores new circuit technology for defense

For the second straight year, a conference here will bring together people involved in research and development of circuits to be used in future missile systems.

This new technology is called microwave and millimeter wave sensors for smart munitions. Other defense applications for these circuits include electronic warfare, radar and communication. A conference scheduled here in November will again bring together designers and manufacturers with Army people who will be managing the new programs.

"The whole idea is to save money by having designers and production people and the users get together to air their problems and difficulties and requirements," said Dr. Joe Derie, a senior engineer in production engineering division of the Research, Development and Engineering center. "By all those people talking early, you're going to reduce costs...The transition from design to production is easier; you have less problems therefore the cost is lower."

Besides helping future production, other reasons for the conference include getting systems that are "reliable and easy for the soldier to maintain," Derie added.

The first such get-together was held here in November 1985 and was "a big success," he said. It drew more than 150 people from industry, defense agencies, and colleges. Similar attendance is expected this year.

Systems they talked about a year ago are still on the drawing board but are further along in that research and development stage. In November, the Defense Department is expected to release its first request for proposals for "microwave and millimeter-wave monolithic integrated circuits." The goal is reducing costs for weapon systems using this new technology.

"MICOM will be very much a part of these new systems," said Derie. He pointed out that the AMC (Army Materiel Command) smart munitions program office is located here. "Smart" missile systems of the future will use sensors to home in on targets so soldiers will not have to aim them like they do today.

The November conference is a joint effort of the System Engineering and Production Directorate and the Advanced Sensors Directorate, both of RD&E center. Dr. Jim Donnelly, chief of production engineering division in System Engineering and Production Directorate, is the conference's technical program chairman. Derie and Bill Pittman, program manager of advanced sensors, both serve as technical program vice-chairmen.

The Chicago-based, Guidance & Control Information Analysis Center is helping to get the word out and is to print the conference proceedings.

People interested in attending the classified conference set for Nov. 4-5 should call Derie 876-8421.

"The Army's going to save money in the long run," he said, referring to benefits from the conference. "We're going to get more producible systems, quicker transition from R&D to production, and we're going to save money. The soldier's going to be better off because we're going to get a better system to him quicker."

Chamber to test hardware in controlled environment

BY BOB HUBBARD

Although not yet officially open, a new test chamber for millimeter wave technology has been added and is ready for operation in the one-of-a-kind Advanced Simulation Center of MICOM's Research, Development and Engineering Center.

"If we received an urgent requirement, we could accept and test hardware today," said Ron Davis, cell manager for the center's new Millimeter Simulation System (MSS). "We just completed on Monday a full-up system demonstration. Everything is operational."

Davis said plans call for government acceptance testing to be conducted within a few weeks, followed by a formal dedication and ribbon cutting ceremony.

The millimeter simulation chamber thus joins three other test chambers, linked to third and fourth generation computers, that can simulate under one roof almost all the real-world environments that affect a missile in flight.

MSS is similar to the existing Radio Frequency Simulation System which is filled with anechoic material of black rubber, arranged like punji sticks. Like the RF chamber, MSS will make possible system level tests while missile hardware is still in the bread-board development stage.

"We'll be able to put seeker hardware in this controlled environment, simulate flights, fly and intercept targets under a variety of conditions," Davis said. "These simulations help developers by exposing and identifying problems even before getting into flight hardware configurations."

Millimeter wave has a higher frequency and shorter wave length than radio frequency and gives more detailed target recognition, can even identify a tank vs. armored personnel carrier, or distinguish a gun barrel from a tank turret.

First customer for the MSS will be the Multiple Launch Rocket System's terminally guided warhead, an international program among the United States, France, West Germany and United Kingdom.

"We are heavily involved supporting terminally guided submunitions but will be available for any Defense Department programs," Davis said.

MSS was designed and built by Boeing Aerospace Co., over the past three years costing approximately $7 million. It operates under the System Simulation and Development Directorate, headed by Rex Powell, and his deputy, Dr. Kelly Grider, who is also chief of the Advanced Simulation Center.

Smithsonian museum gets Army hardware

A full scale, 17-foot long homing-and-kill vehicle from the Army's Homing Overlay Experiment (HOE) has become the first piece of hardware related to the Strategic Defense Initiative to be transferred to the collection of the Smithsonian Institution's National Air and Space Museum.

Secretary of the Army John O. Marsh Jr. presented documents transferring the vehicle to Walter J. Boyne, the museum's director, in ceremonies in Washington. The transfer took place on June 10, the second anniversary of HOE's success in achieving the world's first direct impact intercept of a mock ICBM reentry vehicle above the atmosphere. This achievement provided the first confirmation that nonnuclear defenses against nuclear missiles, as envisioned in the Strategic Defense Initiative, are feasible.

Others participating in the ceremony were Alabama

Congressman Ronnie G. Flippo; Dr. Gordon Smith, deputy director of the Strategic Defense Initiative Organization; Deputy Under Secretary of the Army Amoretta Hoerber; Lt. Gen. John F. Wall, commander of the U.S. Army Strategic Defense Command (USADC); Maj. Gen. Eugene Fox, the deputy commander and program manager of the USADC; and Daniel M. Tellep, president of Lockheed Missiles and Space Company, prime contractor for the HOE vehicle.

Acceptance by the National Air and Space Museum is the second major honor this year for HOE. On March 18, the American Defense Preparedness Association presented its first Strategic Defense Initiative Technical Achievement Award to the government-industry team responsible for HOE.

Army's 'Great American Family' is a big one

WASHINGTON — An Army family from Fort Campbell, Ky., was honored by First Lady Nancy Reagan at the White House Tuesday as one of six "Great American Families."

MSgt. Stanley Hoisington, his wife, Brenda, and their eight children were honored as part of the Fourth Annual Great American Family Awards program. They were flown to Washington, D.C., to attend a ceremony hosted by Reagan, who serves as honorary chairwoman for the awards program.

The American Family Society, a non-profit organization based in Washington, D.C., selected the six families to be honored in behalf of all families who apply time-tested values in their home. These values include how well the family nurtures individual growth, builds teamwork and love, and extends friendship and service to others.

Hoisington, the NCO in charge of Fort Campbell's Public Affairs Office, said he feels "very proud, but also very humbled" about his selection. He explained, "We're kind of a private family. We really weren't sure if we wanted to enter the competition. But we decided to do it for two reasons.

"First, we in the Army often get recognition for doing a good job. We get awards, decorations and promotions. But rarely do our spouses get the recognition that they deserve for the job they do raising and taking care of the family. This was an excellent opportunity for me to recognize my wife for her contributions to our family all these years.

"Second, we hope that by telling what we do to be successful as a family, other families might benefit. We are sincere about this. If there is something we do that other families could do, then I feel we should help."

What this Army family does is rear their children, who range in age from 22 months to 13 years, in an atmosphere of unconditional acceptance and of honest concern for others, Stan said.

As members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, the Hoisingtons share the church-held philosophy that "no other success can compensate for failure in the home." He explained, "Even if I were the world's best sergeant, that distinction would be worthless if we had family problems."

Another major part of the family's success, they believe, is based on their philosophy of helping others in need. "Our problems don't seem so great when we're helping those who are going through rougher times," he said.

The parents set an example by sharing their time with both their church and community.

Brenda is president of the young women's program at their church and teaches a mother's education class once a month at Fort Campbell.

The sergeant, besides heading a young adult program for the church, serves on the Fort Campbell school board, is a Boy Scout committee chairman, and a member of the Pierce Village Board of Governors.

The older children regularly volunteer to help mow lawns for neighbors who are unable to do it for themselves and often babysit for neighbor children in emergencies. As Boy Scouts, the older boys willingly take on community projects, helping to make their neighborhood a better place to live. Even the younger children are encouraged to do a "secret deed" for family members every day.

Extending their service to their own large family, the Hoisingtons implement the "tutor system," an arrange in which each older child is responsible for looking after a younger one. The system not only helps ensure that little ones leave the house with two socks and shoes on their feet, "it really brings the kids closer together," Brenda said.

The Hoisingtons were nominated for the title by the Clarksville Area Chamber of Commerce last November in one of many local ceremonies held throughout the nation and at military installations worldwide. More than 800 communities nationwide sponsored several families each.

Another military family, Marine Col. William T. Sweeney, his wife, Anne, and their 10 children, also were selected as a Great American Family. They live in Subic Bay, Philippines, where Sweeney commands the Subic Bay Marine Barracks. (Arnews)

Travelers can air charter flight concerns

WASHINGTON — Soldiers who suspect a chartered commercial aircraft may have a safety problem have a means to voice their concerns.

A March 4 message to the field from the Military Traffic Management Command contains instructions that "will help assure that there's someone out there looking over the air carrier's shoulder in matters of aircraft safety and reliability," said Lt. Col. Mike Becker, MTMC passenger service chief.

The instructions go hand-in-hand with stepped-up inspection efforts by officials from his command, from the U.S. Air Force Military Airlift Command and from the Federal Aviation Administration. The air crash at Gander, Newfoundland, identified a need for establishing an avenue for travelers to formally express their concerns about aircraft safety and reliability.

Here's how a soldier can bring his concerns to the attention of authorities in a position to act on them: 1. Notify the highest ranking person on the scene. If reasonable grounds exist for safety concerns, and the carrier's explanation is considered insufficient or unsatisfactory, then the highest ranking person on the scene has the authority to stop the boarding of passengers, but no authority to ground the aircraft. 2. Once the boarding ceases, the highest ranking person on the scene should notify MTMC. 3. MTMC will take corrective action as appropriate. This corrective action may result in either the Military Airlift Command or the Federal Aviation Administration's being asked to inspect the aircraft.

Becker explained that all safety-related incidents become part of a carrier's record and are considered when determining whether to do further business with the air carrier. (Arnews)

1983 MREs OK in tests

WASHINGTON — MREs manufactured in 1983 are approved for consumption until July 2, according to Army spokesman Maj. Bruce Bell.

Use of the field ration, which replaced the C-Ration as the Army's primary field feeding ration in 1982, was suspended last month after packaging of some MRE items was discovered to be substandard. While MREs produced in 1983 have passed inspection, those produced after 1983 are still under investigation, Bell said.

If the 1984 and 1985 MREs, which are currently being inspected, are not approved for consumption by July 2, approval for 1983 MRE consumption may be extended, Bell said.

So far, the only MREs found to have faulty packaging were produced in 1986, said Bell, although inspection of all rations as a precaution has been ordered. (Arnews)

ACS leader feels community has a lot to offer

BY SKIP VAUGHN

The first civilian over Army Community Service at Redstone is a Chicago native who formerly served as an education counselor on post.

As administrator, Janeen Rosenberg oversees the entire ACS operation which includes social service programs and relocation services. The position was converted from military to civilian in April.

"I feel a very strong attachment to the Redstone Arsenal community for I've worked closely with many soldiers in my previous job," said Rosenberg, a GS-12. "I enjoy this position because I have a greater influence on the military and family members in helping them to enjoy their time spent here.

"It is my hope along with our staff that we can help military personnel and their family members alleviate any problems that they may be experiencing," she added, "and to make them feel like they're an important asset in the community at Redstone Arsenal and Huntsville."

ACS needs many volunteers to help provide its programs. Voluntary assistance is also needed for "fun events that have been going on in the past, in order that they can continue in the future," Rosenberg added. These events and observances include flea markets, a block party, Family Action Day, Army Family Week, Spouse Day, and carnivals for Army Emergency Relief.

"My goals are to create better communication of the services that we offer to the people here at Redstone Arsenal; to make things easier for new arrivals by offering them information about the post, use of our lending closet, financial assistance, a sense of connectiveness with the school system." Rosenberg said, "to make them feel like someone is concerned over their welfare and to make it easier for them to come on board."

The 33-year-old administrator was raised in Chicago. She left at 17 to attend Southern Illinois University in Carbondale. With the help of a financial scholarship, Rosenberg paid her college expenses by working. Her jobs included serving as chairperson of Special Olympics for southern Illinois, teaching as a graduate assistant, and— she adds with a laugh — working as "the only female janitor." She received a bachelor's degree in 1974 and a master's a year later, both in rehabilitation from the college of education.

In 1975, Rosenberg went to work as Army Community Service administrator at Selfridge Air National Guard Base in Mt. Clemens, Mich. She "got tired of cold weather" and moved to Myrtle Beach, S.C., where she worked as an education counselor at the Air Force base there. She went on to spend six months at Luke Air Force Base near Phoenix, Ariz. before accepting a position as ACS administrator at Fort Lewis, Wash. After a year and a half, she came to Huntsville in 1982.

"I love Huntsville," said Rosenberg, who spent the past four years as an education counselor on post. "We work very closely along with the outside community and I feel that there's a lot to offer to everyone residing here."

ADMINISTRATOR — Janeen Rosenberg has led ACS here since April 7.

Ceremony opens center for battlefield automation

A ceremony last week officially opened a building here that serves as a place for designing and developing computer technology to meet the needs of new weapon systems.

"This is a big day for a lot of folks that had a hand in making this center a reality," said Maj. Gen. Thomas Reese, MICOM commander. The life cycle software engineering center is located in a remote area near the Redstone airfield. It serves as home for the Battlefield Automation Management Directorate.

Reese credited former commanders and others "who carried the ball" for bringing the center about. The Army is in the midst of the largest modernization ever in peacetime, he said. "It's you men and women who are doing the job in the center that are ultimately responsible for making those programs work," Reese said. "Our ultimate responsibility is to the soldier."

The MICOM commander added that he was proud to be part of a winning team. Reese cut the ceremonial ribbon along with Huntsville Mayor Joe Davis; Dr. William McCorkle, director of the Research, Development and Engineering Center; and Col. Philip Dombrowski, director of Battlefield Automation Management Directorate.

McCorkle told the officials, workers and guests that the project began in 1979 and was completed this year. Construction started about two years ago on the building that cost about $8 million, he said.

Life cycle software engineering means supporting, from start to finish, the computer programs used in today's weapons. This software— what Dombrowski calls the computer "brains"—controls a variety of tactical functions. These functions include everything from finding the target, to shooting at it. The main purpose of the software engineering center is to support the project offices in developing and fielding systems with imbedded computer systems. It supports 17 automated weapon systems managed by the Missile Command.

"We have roughly 250 personnel in the building now," Dombrowski said. This includes about 100 government workers and 150 contractor people.

Veterinary services encourages checkup

Veterinary services tries to prevent diseases common to both animals and humans.

These zoonotic diseases include "a wide diversity of health problems and infective agents," states CWO 2 Alex Stokes, deputy commander of Veterinary Services. In a prepared release, he says "those involved in disease spread include bacteria, viruses, fungi, fleas, ticks, and mosquitoes." The diseases vary from mild "ringworm" to the deadly rabies.

"The prevention of disease is most desirable," Stokes says in the release. "Prevention is easily accomplished for some disease (i.e., rabies, heartworm disease). This is obtained through vaccinations and the use of specific 'preventatives.' Timely examinations for the diagnosis and treatment of any health problem is encouraged. Additionally, state law and local regulations require certain vaccinations and preventive measures at specified time intervals. Check with the Veterinary Services to determine if you are in compliance."

Active and retired military are authorized limited veterinary medicine for their pets by the staff of Veterinary Services' Animal Disease Prevention and Control Facility, building 3543. "The primary mission of this facility is the prevention, control and treatment of zoonotic diseases which are common to animals and humans," Stokes says.

For appointments for vaccinations, examinations and appropriate treatments call 876-2441.

Motorcycle group helps boys' ranch

The Redstone Riders Motorcycle Club has raised $500 for the Alabama Sheriffs Boys Ranch.

Members plan to ride to the ranch at Danville, Ala., outside Decatur, on Sunday afternoon, June 22, to present the check. The money was raised in a three-day tour the club held in May in Scottsboro for the American Motorcycle Association. It was the proceeds from a drawing for a motorcycle trailer.

"All the riders like to ride the motorcycles, we use the events that we sponsor to raise money for the community," said SSgt. Randy Fraser, safety officer in the club. "It's a good way to raise money. We contribute to the community just through our own pleasures, really. It's a way we can do something we really like to do and still help someone while we're doing it."

The club, a nonprofit organization, is open to active duty and retired military, and civilian employees. Officers include Bob Barcus, president; SSgt. Ron Martin, vice president; Phyllis Applegate, secretary; Anita Fosnight, treasurer; Kent Proctor, sergeant-at-arms; and Fraser, safety officer.

GETTING AROUND CAN BE EXPENSIVE.

If you're headed back to civilian life, reserve yourself an extra income one weekend a month.

Unlike the Army, most civilian jobs don't provide transportation. You already know how much cars and gasoline cost.

But wait'll you see what it costs to ride subways, buses or commuter trains these days.

There's a way to cope—just spend one weekend a month with your local Army Reserve unit, and you'll earn a lot more than bus fare.

Did you know that an F-5 with four years' experience now makes over $115 for a Reserve weekend?

Add in two weeks annual training pay, and the total can easily top $1,922 per year.

You can also continue to save by buying tires and other auto accessories through the PX. Reservists get PX privileges.

Plus retirement points toward a pension which begins five years before Social Security.

Wouldn't it be nice to have all that waiting when you get home?

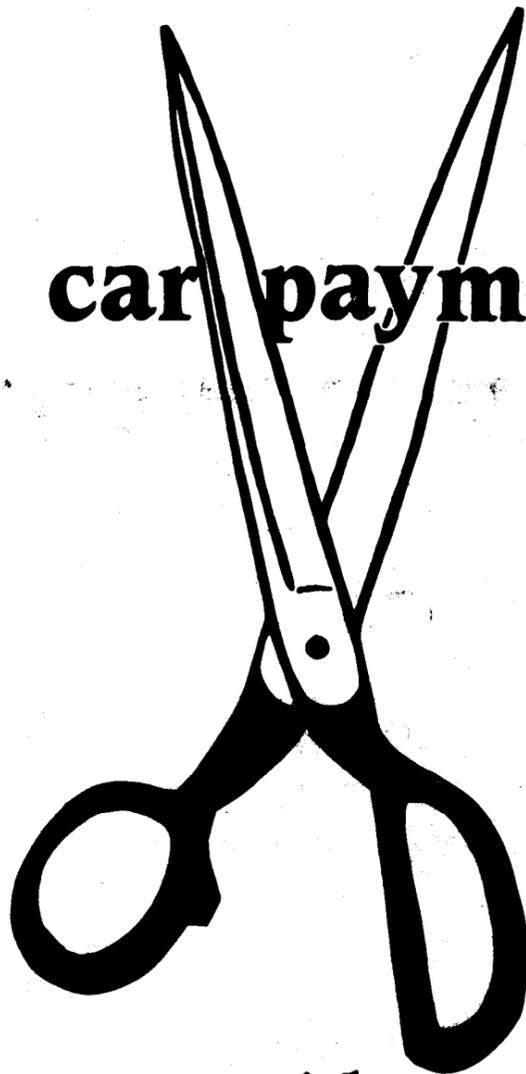

It can be arranged. See your reenlistment NCO or unit commander. Or talk to your in-service recruiter, listed below. Act fast. The cost of getting around on the outside increases every day.

NCO Wives Club honors students

Three college students should have an easier time paying tuition, thanks to the NCO Wives Club.

The club has awarded a $1,200 scholarship to Stephanie Wilkins, who will be attending the University of Alabama at Tuscaloosa. She is the daughter of retired sergeant first class Leon and Carrie Wilkins. The award was presented at Johnson High School's honors day by Blanche Moore, scholarship chairperson for NCO Wives Club.

Two merit awards of $350 each went to Peter Way and Derrick Johnson. "Those merit awards will be sent to the colleges that they attend," said Stephana Williams, club spokesman. Way attends Calhoun College while Johnson goes to the University of Alabama in Birmingham.

Peter is the son of retired sergeant first class Kenneth and Thelma Way. Derrick is the son of Sgt. Maj. Davie and Dessie Johnson.

Army thanks Gander for crash assistance

WASHINGTON — Senior Army officials traveled to Gander, Newfoundland, on June 10 to honor the memory of the 248 soldiers from the 101st Airborne Division who died in the Dec. 12, 1985 airplane accident. They also were there to thank the citizens of Gander for their support and assistance following the crash.

The 101st Airborne soldiers were returning from six months' peacekeeping duty in the Sinai Peninsula.

Maj. Gen. John S. Crosby, assistant deputy chief of staff for personnel, who headed the Army's recovery efforts at Gander; Maj. Gen. Burton D. Patrick, commanding general, 101st Airborne Division; Dr. (Col.) Robert R. McMeekin, director of the Armed Forces Institute of Pathology, which was responsible for identifying the soldiers and eight crewmembers; and other Army representatives visited the airport and crash site on June 11.

During a dinner hosted by the U.S. Army, Crosby presented plaques to the citizens of Gander, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, the Canadian forces stationed in Gander, and to the staff of the Gander airport.

Patrick presented shadow boxes of the "Screaming Eagle" (symbol of the 101st), to those groups and to the commander of Argentia, a U.S. Naval facility near Newfoundland. Argentia personnel were the first U.S. representatives to reach Gander after the crash and assisted in the recovery efforts. (Arnews)

Second career advised for military retirees

BY DONNA BOLINGER
American Forces Information Service

Carl Lindgren swallowed hard as he looked into the mirror, straightened his tie and ran a comb through his hair. At 50, he was preparing for his first job interview.

Each year, thousands of service members like Lindgren hang up their uniforms for the last time and return to the civilian life they left behind 20 years earlier.

Retirement means major life changes. It often means beginning a second career, relocating, dealing with a cut in pay and benefits and leaving behind a demanding — but familiar — lifestyle.

With these changes often come apprehension and stress.

"There's some elation about starting something new, some sadness about leaving behind a big part of your life, but most of all, a lot of trepidation," said retired Air Force Lt. Col. Sid Einbinder, who counsels service members at Bolling Air Force Base in Washington, D.C., who are nearing retirement.

Fear, explained Chuck Jackson of the Noncommissioned Officers Association, is the most common emotion experienced by soon-to-be-retirees. "It's basically a fear of the unknown. And the closer the retirement date gets, the more apprehensive a service member often becomes."

The best way to ease the anxiety and make a smooth transition from military to civilian life, retired affairs counselors agree, is to begin a second career with as little delay as possible.

"Employment is the key," Jackson said. "Once they (new retiree) overcome that hurdle, the mystique military people often have about civilian life goes away and the rest of the adjustments tend to take care of themselves."

But some retirees, particularly those who have never interviewed for a civilian job, find the job hurdle a threatening obstacle, according to Lt. Col. David Braze, chief of the Army's Retired and Veterans Affairs Office.

Braze said service members should assess the skills acquired during their military careers and determine which are marketable in the civilian sector.

This may be easier for those, like Lindgren, whose military specialties translate readily into civilian skills. "I was lucky," he said referring to industry's demand for his speciality, electronics. "I was surprised to find that I didn't have to go looking for them; they came looking for me," Lindgren said. "It gave me a lot of confidence, even though I'd never had a civilian job before."

But even retirees whose military experience isn't in demand in the civilian sector can capitalize on the positive traits the military has helped them develop that they, in turn, can offer employers. Jackson said that among these are dedication, maturity, leadership, dependability, a sense of responsibility, the ability to work a project through to completion and the ability to work under less than optimum conditions.

"You are a highly skilled, highly trained person who has had a good, solid background in military service where adversity and obstacles are met head-on every day," wrote retired Air Force Col. Doug Carter in The Retired Officers Association's "Marketing Yourself For A Second Career." "You are a person who is accustomed to producing quality work under stress and strain."

Marketing these valuable skills, he said, requires perseverance and self-confidence.

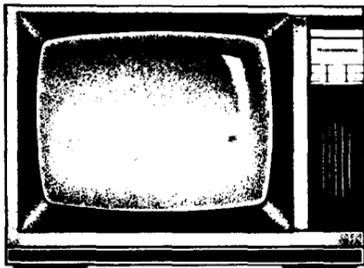

Those not confident about their resume writing and interviewing skills can consult research and professional material on the subjects available at most military and public libraries. And almost all retired affairs offices offer pre-retirement orientation and counseling sessions that deal with this and other important retiree information.

Retired affairs counselors stress that the best way for a military person to move smoothly, and with the least apprehension, into civilian life is to have a job waiting.

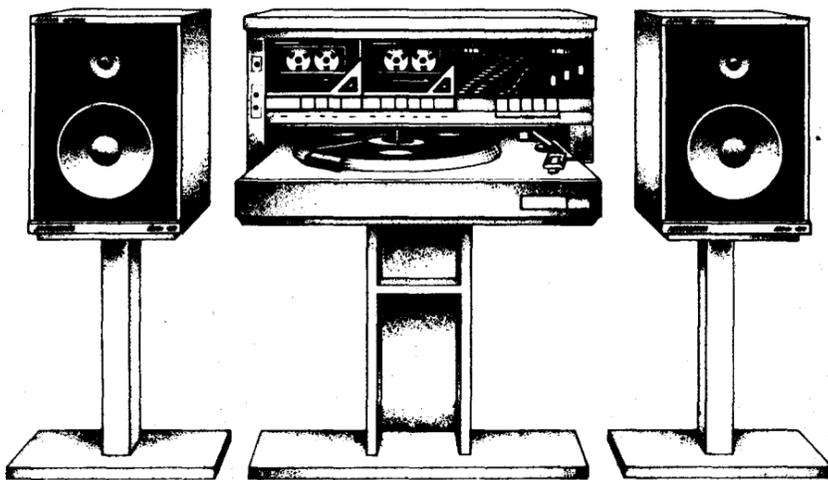

"Immediate employment is the key to the transitional process," Jackson said. "When a retiree is able to look back on his military career with satisfaction and to look forward to having the flexibility to do the things he's never had the chance to do.

"Leaving the service isn't the end of the world. It's entering a new and different world, but one retirees are well qualified to cope with."

Commissary here enjoys its best sales month ever

The commissary has exceeded the $2 million mark in one-month sales for the first time ever.

The fact that the record sales came about the same time of a decision to contract out its shelf-stocking function was a tribute to the workers, according to the commissary officer.

"In light of the contracting out decision, employees remain highly motivated, (and) keep their positive attitude to continue doing a great job and keep the store running," said Bill Penney. He is optimistic that the people involved in the impending contract action can be placed in other departments in the commissary.

Twenty-one jobs were involved in the initial decision to convert to commercial contract. Penney said about 11 are filled by permanent workers, five temporaries, and the rest are vacant slots. "In anticipation of it (the contract decision), we withheld hiring of permanent employees so, in most cases, we'll actually be eliminating vacant positions," he said. "And others can be transferred to positions in other departments."

Penney describes the affected workers as mainly "the night stocking crew that replenish the shelves each day." The commercial activities package is available for review at the MICOM comptrollers office, room A-360 in building 5250, through June 27. Interested parties must first contact either Vivian Tucker or Jan Barton of comptrollers' management plan division (phone 876-8991) for an appointment.

The commissary reported $2,090,000 in sales for May, its best total ever. By comparison, the May 1985 sales figure was $1.9 million. Penney recalls when monthly sales totaled about $1 million "this time seven years ago in our old store."

May's sales figure is "a big milestone for this store and for the workers, and it's an indicator of the magnitude of the work that they are doing," the commissary officer said. The work force consists of 97 government employees.

The successful month was attributed to extra sales promotions including two sidewalk sales and many in-store promotions.

"Notwithstanding that (contract decision), the workers are still performing at a high level and it's a tribute to their professionalism and great attitude," Penney said. "I think that's the significance of $2 million."

Plan early for military retirement

BY DONNA BOLINGER
American Forces Information Service

Some people spend years planning a big vacation trip. They begin Christmas shopping months in advance and make dinner reservations weeks ahead of a special occasion.

But it's not until they get their retirement papers in hand that many military people start thinking about their retirement.

"In general, the military retiree is sadly lacking in the knowledge of how retirement is going to affect him and his family," said Lt. Col. David Braze, chief of the Army's Retired and Veterans Affairs Office.

Preparing for retirement, he said, requires a full year of research and self-evaluation during which a service member determines:

- when to retire;
- how to meet financial obligations upon retirement; and
- where to live.

"There's a tendency for retirees to look at a job as the most important part of this decision," Braze said. "But all three factors need to be considered together as a package."

When to retire. For those service members who have reached their mandatory retirement date, there's no decision to be made. But for those deciding when to retire, personal finances and career opportunities should be prime considerations.

When civilian workers retire, they often retire for good. Not so in the military, where retirees tend to be younger than their civilian counterparts and often have college-age children. Few military retirees find themselves with a choice when it comes to beginning a second career.

Retired Army Col. Peter B. Farrell of The Retired Officers Association said there's a common misconception among active duty people that they qualify for half pay after 20 years of service. In fact, retired pay amounts to 37 to 58 percent of their full military pay, depending on length of service, Braze said.

How to meet financial obligations upon retirement. Before retiring, Farrell advises service members to determine their financial resources upon retirement. That means calculating their military retired pay, social security and other income, including that earned by the spouse, and entitlement to disability income and Veterans Administration compensation.

Financial needs must also be calculated. In addition to current living costs, a pre-retiree must also consider the costs of:

- housing without the variable housing allowance;
- civilian health care as the retiree goes from receiving such benefits on a priority basis while on active duty to a standby basis during retirement;
- Civilian dental care as access to military care becomes very limited and dependents are no longer authorized such care;
- Commercial life insurance costs when Veterans Group Life Insurance coverage (which replaces Servicemen's Group Life Insurance on retirement) expires five years after leaving the service; and
- Survivor Benefit Plan participation (available only if elected before retirement).

These calculations will help the military retiree evaluate, and reevaluate, his financial circumstances during retirement.

Where to live. Frequent assignments sometimes leave military people with no strong ties to any particular area; so in many cases, a retiring service member has many choices of a retirement area.

The employment potential of an area might be a strong drawing card, as might be the climate. But Farrell said other factors, like housing costs, access to and cost of education, recreational opportunities and proximity to military facilities also deserve careful consideration.

For some military retirees, access to military hospitals, commissaries and exchanges are among the strongest considerations because they offer significant savings in living expenses.

Farrell suggests that before deciding on a particular area, a retiree make a personal visit, especially if he's based on memories of that area.

Retiree affairs counselors agree that planning is critical to a successful retirement. The better prepared a military person is the retire, they say, the more positive the experience is likely to be.

Disco bombing victims get Purple Heart

WASHINGTON — Forty-four soldiers and three airmen injured in the April 5 terrorist bombing of the La Belle disco in Berlin, West Germany, were recently awarded Purple Hearts.

Sgt. Kenneth T. Ford, Combat Support Company, 4th Battalion, 502nd Infantry, and a Turkish woman were killed in the bombing, and 230 people were injured. SSgt. James E. Goins, assigned to the same unit as Ford, died June 7 of injuries sustained from the incident.

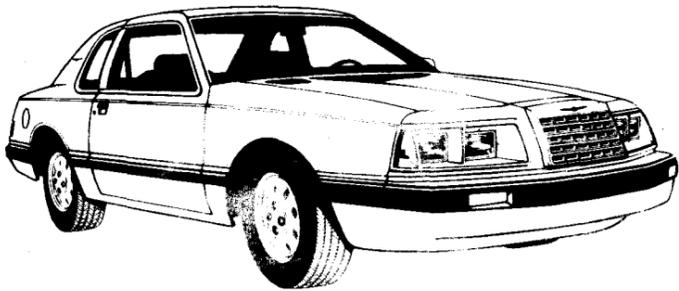

Purple Hearts were awarded May 23 to eight of the nine 1st Armored Division soldiers injured in the bombing. The soldiers, all assigned to the 6th Battalion, 14th Artillery, received their medals from Lt. Gen.

Andrew P. Chambers, VII Corps commander, during the unit's 69th organization day celebrations. The soldiers were in Berlin to fill in for Berlin Brigade artillerymen who were on maneuvers. (Arnews)

Most people think Auto Shack has the best prices in auto parts, while NAPA has the best parts in auto parts. Well, they're only half right. Truth is, Auto Shack has both. Take water pumps for example. NAPA's water pump is supplied by Dana.

Ours is made by SKF, who also makes precision parts for Ferrari, Mercedes and Boeing. And the guarantee? NAPA's lasts a year. Auto Shack's lasts a lifetime. And our price? That beats NAPA, too. Plus everybody else for that matter.
