LOGSA building approved for Sparkman complex

BY SKIP VAUGHN

A building to house the LOGSA organization has been approved as an addition to the Sparkman Center complex which is under construction.

The LOGSA Operations Facility will be a 93,000 square foot building occupied by 420 people, according to Sam Fields, associate director for Directorate of Public Works (formerly Directorate of Engineering and Housing). The Logistics Support Activity is a new organization at Redstone Arsenal.

The $13.2 million building is funded by 1991 Base Realignment and Closure project money. This is a scaled down version of what was originally programmed as the Armaments Support Annex, which would have included Army workers relocating from Rock Island Arsenal, Ill. The Rock Island move was cancelled earlier this year. The original project called for a 354,000 square foot facility with a $42.5 million price tag.

"The Armaments Support Annex is no longer an appropriate title or name and that went away with the BRAC '93 becoming law," Fields said. "The new facility will house the BRAC portion of LOGSA which is some 420 people, and the building itself will be approximately 93,000 square feet."

HALFWAY DONE — The Sparkman complex is 54 percent complete, which is ahead of schedule.

Earlier this year cancellation of the Rock Island move put plans for the new building on hold, but a portion of the project has now been revised and retitled as the LOGSA Operations Facility. "The LOGSA people that were originally scheduled under Armaments (Support Annex) are the same ones that are going into that facility," Fields said. A decision to go ahead with the LOGSA facility came in early September from the Department of Army BRAC office.

"We'll have to go back out with a request for proposals," said Joe J. Davis, acting chief of the programming and construction office at Directorate of Public Works. "We're beginning to work on that right now; it'll take us about 11 months. So, next September (1994) we should start construction."

Completion is envisioned for February 1996. This building will become part of the Sparkman Center complex, and will be located at the east end of the current seven buildings.

"Upon the completion of the LOGSA facility, the complex will be eight buildings," Fields said. "It will be very similar to the 'A' (five-story) building except it will only be three or four stories; and that's yet to be determined."

The seven Sparkman complex buildings under construction include a five-story facility with a basement; four three-story buildings, two of which have basements; two single-story buildings and a mechanical/equipment facility which is also a single story. Total cost is $58.4 million for this 686,790 square foot complex. The project is 54 percent complete which is ahead of the scheduled 38 percent, according to Fields.

Current schedule is for the entire seven-building complex to be complete by June 1994. About 2,600 people will move in.

"We're in the process right now of literally going through each organization that's scheduled to go into the Sparkman complex; and first determining that that organization will fit where we proposed into the complex," Fields said. "And then (as a final step) we'll put the individual's name within each organization by the individual desk layout."

Construction workers will try to have most of the paving and landscaping, the trees, installed before winter to allow time for growth, according to Davis. "And we're going to try to put all the paving in around the complex, to cut down the mud on the surrounding roadways," Davis said.

Fields added his personal thanks to the people working with him as members of the Sparkman project management team which he leads. These include Davis, Roger Schwerman, Carol Meekins, Oscar Eubank, and Ed Yates who is matrix support from the AMC Management Engineering Activity.

Sparkman Center area preparation bringing change in traffic pattern

During the Columbus Day holiday weekend, Oct. 9-11, base support contractor people will be working around MICOM headquarters building 5250 to change the traffic pattern. These changes are in preparation for the Sparkman Center complex.

As more access to the new Sparkman area is required for construction and installation vehicles, changes in the traffic pattern will make this transition easier, according to Jo Gaskin, the building manager for 5250.

"They do anticipate that the need for access to Sparkman (Complex) is going to increase, and they're just getting ready for that."

— Jo Gaskin
Bldg. manager for 5250

"They do anticipate that the need for access to Sparkman (Complex) is going to increase, and they're just getting ready for that," she said.

The major changes which will occur include the following:

- Intersection of Martin and Burose Road will become two-way.
- Burose Road will be two-way.
- Access road on the east side of building 5250 will also become two-way.
- Curbside parking at the back of building 5250 will be eliminated.

During the weekend, Oct. 9-10, access to building 5250 will be somewhat limited. However, if personnel comply with road signs, there shouldn't be any problem, Gaskin said.

SIGNS OF THE PAST — This access road on the east side of building 5250 will become two-way.

Retirement event

Editor's note: Retired Maj. Gen. William Chen sent the following letter to Maj. Gen. Joe Rigby, commander of the Missile Command and Redstone Arsenal.

Having served four tours at Redstone Arsenal, coupled with my most recent association as PEO Missile Defense, my retirement ceremony at Redstone will always be a lasting memory for me.

Please convey to the MICOM Redstone Arsenal Support Activity and the Protocol Office my sincere thanks and appreciation for all their outstanding efforts in the September retirement parade and reception.

In particular, please thank Col. Ross Sanders, Ms. Lynda Mobley, Ms. Genice Fuqua, and Ms. Dorothy Hosea for their part in making the event such a success.

Caring hospital

Editor:

During my 21-year Army career I heard many a horror story regarding the military medical system. Having been healthy throughout that career I never really had a chance to truly experience the system. However the events of the past eight days have enlightened me and have put a new perspective on the men and women of the Fox Army Community Hospital (FACH).

My wife, Eva, was admitted to FACH's Medical Surgical Ward (MSW) on Sept. 20 after having been diagnosed with a tumor. She had surgery the next day and although the tumor has been completely removed, she will require follow-up treatment. From the moment she was admitted to the moment she was discharged on Sept. 27 she was treated with respect, compassion, care and love from every individual she came in contact with at FACH. I stayed with Eva during her eight-day stay at FACH, therefore I was able to see firsthand the treatment she received. Not only was Eva given this care, each one of the patients at the MSW received the same type of care. The compassion and care given Eva at the MSW was by far the best she could have received. There is no doubt in my mind that she received better and kinder care at FACH than she could have received in one of the civilian hospitals in Huntsville.

A special mention of thanks is in order for the following people: Ms. Emma Breach, Ms. Angie Burrows, Ms. Virginia Downs, Ms. Deborah Hall, Ms. Mable Heigaard, Ms. Patsy Johnson, Lt. Knapp, Ms. Maryla Lee, Ms. Karen Meloon, Ms. Bonnie Mobley, Ms. Angie Nickles, Sgt. Pearce, Ms. Barbara Pendleton, Capt. Ramos, Spec. Roberson, Dr. Thornton and Col. Wong. I'm sure that I have missed mentioning some of the outstanding help, however, it was not intentional and we appreciate all of the people there.

In closing I again wish to commend the professional and dedicated people you have at the Fox Army Community Hospital and hope and pray that it will always be there for the many active and retired military personnel and their dependents in this area when needed.

TQM support

Editor:

Why won't TQM work? Ask 10 Redstone Arsenal employees that question and nine will probably say they feel, "It's because management won't support TQM." "Management" today is perceived much the way "banks" were perceived in the 1930s. The group is not composed of real people but some foggy barrier to progress willing to hurt anyone or anything in their way. With such an image, it is easy to blame them for whatever we can't make work. Let's look at an example.

The Quality Institute uses a large volume of white paper in practice exercises and teaching. When I was assigned here, I asked how we could recycle this white paper. I learned that the Environmental Office had already told us they could not modify the white paper recycle contract to include activities off-post. I could easily have stopped there and blamed "management" as the culprit.

But I've been recycling for years now. I am very proud that our family recycles more than we throw away each week. I decided to try another approach. If the recyclers would not come to us, could we go to them?

Our office, like most others off-post, has a daily courier from Redstone Arsenal. Jim Lynch, our courier, was only too glad to help. We collect and bag the waste white paper. Jim picks it up every other week and takes it to a recycle bin on post.

The initial roadblock from the Environmental Office turned out to be a blessing in disguise. Had they agreed to modify the contract, collection of white paper from our remote site would have been much less efficient than the system we adopted.

TQM WILL NOT WORK if we stop trying at the first obstacle and blame someone for the failure.

TQM WILL WORK if we all think creatively, work together, and continuously seek small improvements to "the system."

A. Morton Archibald Jr., P.E.
The Quality Institute

Post priorities

Editor:

Last year a fountain was installed on the golf course costing thousands of dollars. Now a new golf clubhouse and driving range is being built. An overpass or underpass plans to be built here while one still does not exist for children near the Youth Center, Child Development Center and ballparks. For heaven's sake, where is your sense of conscience while millions of people are being laid off work, janitorial services had to be cut back, and there is very little money available to attend college. Have you none?

Name withheld by request

(Editor's note: Steve Carter, executive assistant at Redstone Arsenal Support Activity, provided the following response. "The golf course projects are funded by locally generated nonappropriated funds earned from revenue producing activities such as our clubs, golf, bowling and the post exchange here on post. Money generated from those activities is limited to helping operate and maintaining our many Morale and Welfare programs such as youth activities, sports, crafts, outdoor recreation as well as to construct new facilities such as the golf course addition. A few years ago we constructed our new youth activities facility from this source of revenue. On the other hand, custodial services, etc. are paid from congressionally appropriated funds which for the past three fiscal years running have been reduced by some 12 percent.")

Customer Service spotlight: Public Works representative

Editor's note: The Customer Service Corner will become a regular feature in the Rocket. Look for future articles highlighting one of our offices on Redstone Arsenal that provides information on how to obtain better service or get the information you need. It will also be a forum for customer feedback.

BY SANDA MARTEL

The customer relations representative in the Directorate of Public Works (formerly Directorate of Engineering and Housing) is a single point of contact for those who don't know who to call in DPW to find out what they need to know.

Anita Harrison is located in building 7613. Her telephone number is 955-6600. Hours are 7 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday. If she isn't there, someone else will receive her calls and direct you to who you need to talk to.

DPW has the overall mission to provide safe, appropriate and functional facilities for people working and living on Redstone Arsenal.

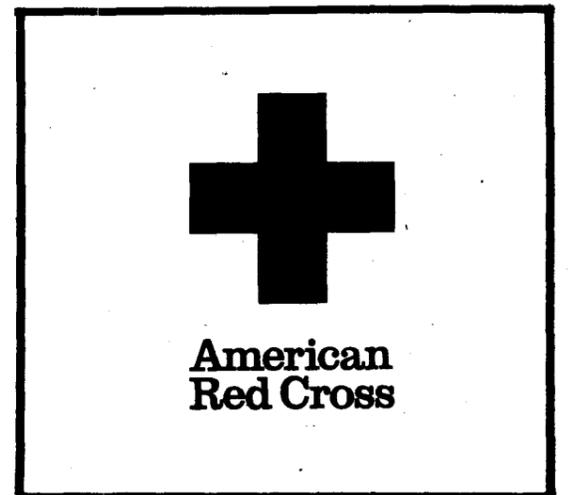

That includes fire prevention and protection, management of arsenal housing, roads/grounds/building management, construction, repair and maintenance projects, job order requests, environmental issues, and management of the Self-Help store.

"If customers call me to report a problem, I give them the option of my taking care of making the necessary calls to get an answer for them or I offer them the name and telephone number for them to make the call themselves. I will always follow up to make sure they got the information they needed," Harrison said.

Many of her calls revolve around callers wanting to know the status of work orders and requisitions. So if you have a work order in to get a new office door installed and want to find out when the workers will be out for the installation, Harrison is the person to call.

She's there to help you get the information and service you need in DPW.

Building 4488 dedicated as the Medaris Center

BY SKIP VAUGHN

Building 4488 is now officially known as the Maj. Gen. John B. Medaris Center for Acquisition Excellence.

The building, home of the Missile Command's Acquisition Center, was dedicated as the Medaris Center in a ceremony on its front lawn Sept. 27. Honored guests included retired Lt. Col. John B. Medaris, the late general's son. Al Reeder, director of the Acquisition Center, told him, "We're proud to have you with us, sir, for this occasion we're all proud to participate in."

Many local dignitaries and retired members of the Army missile team were also in attendance at the event which honored the former commanding general. Medaris' military career spanned four decades. He activated the Army Ballistic Missile Agency (ABMA), for which building 4488 was constructed as the headquarters facility. Medaris later commanded the U.S. Army Ordnance Missile Command, being responsible for development, acquisition, and fielding of every Army rocket and missile system.

NEW SIGN — This is the new sign for building 4488, home of the Acquisition Center.

"I'm proud to be a part of the organization that will bear his name," Reeder said.

Maj. Gen. Joe Rigby, commander of the Missile Command and Redstone Arsenal, said, "General Medaris was one of the unique individuals who made things happen."

Rigby recalled how Medaris made Redstone Arsenal the birthplace of the Army missile and space program. "We think that he would be proud of how his legacy is being carried on at Redstone Arsenal," Rigby said.

Joe Moquin, who was a close friend and former associate of Medaris, shared his memories about the early years. He described Medaris as "the ultimate leader/manager."

"General Medaris' devotion and loyalty to the Army will stand out above all other memories of this great, outstanding American," Moquin said.

Rigby, Reeder, and Medaris' son unveiled the roadside sign bearing the building's new name. The younger Medaris told Rigby, "I only wish he were here to see it."

Hellfire number 1,000 launched at Eglin AFB, Fla.

BY PAM ROGERS

Workers from the Air-to-Ground Project Office, the Air Force's 46th Test Wing, the PEO for Tactical Missiles, contractor employees and other guests were on hand at Eglin Air Force Base, Fla., last week for a momentous occasion: the 1,000th test firing of a Hellfire missile at Eglin's test area C-7.

Early testing of Hellfire was done here at Redstone, but test ranges were too small to support the missile, so the search began for a new test range. It ended at Eglin, and the relationship between the Air Force, the project office and contractors has been strong ever since, according to Ed Perkins, chief of the Air-to-Ground test branch. Hellfire number one was fired from on the range in 1984.

"The 46th Test Wing's outstanding test support of the Hellfire test program has contributed immeasurably to the program's continued success," he stated.

MICOM and PEO workers, representatives from Martin Marietta, Raytheon, Vitro, and the flight crew enjoyed a cookout before the launch, and cake after the launch.

Missile number 1,000 was a Periodic Environmental Test fired at a tank off an AH-64 Apache helicopter that was flown to Eglin from Fort Rucker, Ala. The missile hit the target.

Col. Charles Greer, Air-to-Ground project manager, said Hellfire has been a continued success because of the people in the project office.

"They are a fantastic group of professionals who are willing to do whatever is best for the program," he said.

CELEBRATION — George Williams, program executive officer for tactical missiles, cuts the cake in celebration of the firing of the 1,000th Hellfire.

Redstone's 'Firefighter of the Year' a 20-year veteran of the department

A 20-year veteran of Redstone Fire Department is the first recipient of the department's Paul J. Molette Memorial award for Firefighter of the Year.

District chief Robert McFarland received the 1993 award which is named in honor of a Redstone firefighter who died Sept. 30, 1992 in the line of duty. "The winner is not selected by anybody in the fire department," said Bill Cross, chief of the fire department. "In this case, it was selected by an outside organization that didn't want to be recognized (by name)."

The award, which will be presented each year, was the idea of Redstone firefighter Sandy Boyd. A separate plaque will go to Jacqueline Molette, wife of the late firefighter, who moved to Selma after her husband's death.

"I am humbled and honored to be recognized by my fellow firefighters," McFarland said. "I think that's the highest recognition an employee can get, is to be recognized by his co-workers. It's one thing to be recognized by your supervisors; but to be recognized by your co-workers, to me, that truly is humbling and flattering."

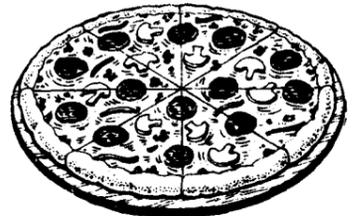

Cross presented the award to McFarland on Monday at the Rideout Road fire station, one of four fire stations on post. Oct. 3-9 is National Fire Prevention Week.

Defense Department gives results of bottom-up review

WASHINGTON — Secretary of Defense Les Aspin released on Sept. 1 the results of his bottom-up review of the Department of Defense. The review, a recommendation to Congress, is, according to defense officials, a process that will get us from today's force, based on the Cold War requirements, to a force that is based on the requirements of the post-Cold War, post-Soviet era.

According to another official, the review put "everything on the table" and "opened up the whole set of force assumptions to see if they're the right ones, to see the differences they make, and to build our forces against that."

The Army, along with the other services and the Joint Staff, participated in the review.

Force reductions

The review determines the necessary Army force for the future to be 10 active-duty divisions; and 15 enhanced reserve component brigades which equates to five plus reserve component divisions.

This force structure cuts an additional two active Army divisions and one reserve division from the current force between fiscal years 1995 and 1999.

According to a senior Army official, the two active divisions have not yet been identified.

Aspin said the review began with identifying the dangers that our national security will face in the future. These dangers fall into four categories: dangers posed by nuclear weapons and other weapons of mass destruction; regional dangers posed by the threat of large scale aggression along with smaller, often internal conflicts; dangers to democracy and reform in emerging nations and elsewhere; and economic dangers if the U.S. fails to build a strong and competitive economy.

According to Aspin, the review initially focused on the capability to deal with these dangers and not the budget.

Primary mission

Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff Gen. Colin Powell said, referring to military missions, "You name it. We can do it...but we must not forget the primary mission of our military is to fight and win the nation's wars."

Powell said a fundamental principle guiding the review is for the military to be able to handle two nearly simultaneous major regional conflicts.

Other changes to the current military force include a reduction of three active and five reserve Air Force fighter wings, one active and one reserve Navy airwing, and two combat aircraft carriers. (Arnews)

Army showband coming to Redstone's Sports Haven

The USA Express All Army Soldier Showband, which is touring installations across the country through November, will appear at the Sports Haven at 8 p.m. Friday, Oct. 29. Tickets are $5 per person. The entire Redstone community is welcome to this event.

USA Express is made up of the most talented instrumentalists and vocalists who competed in the August '93 Army Battle of Bands held at Aberdeen Proving Ground, Md. The musical battle is sponsored by the Army Community and Family Support Center (CFSC) Entertainment Division, the same Alexandria, Va.-based agency which produces the U.S. Army Soldier Show.

"The idea is to build esprit de corps and pride by sending talented soldiers on tour to entertain their fellow soldiers," said Michael Wellert, chief of the CFSC Entertainment Division. "We've seen tremendous success with the Soldier Show and there are so many talented soldiers and so much interest in music that we wanted to come up with another smaller vehicle to showcase more talent. USA Express lets us do that. Audiences can dance and party to this music in a nightclub environment. That's what the show is designed for."

Wellert and other Entertainment Division staff selected USA Express from the nine bands which participated in the Battle of Bands. Selections were based on talent, musical ability, stage presence, and military presence.

The following soldiers were selected to participate as members of USA Express, the All-Army Soldier Showband:

- Spec. Anthony Carr, bass, Schweinfurt, Germany;
- Spec. Vernon Cunningham, lead guitar, Fort Campbell, Ky.;
- Spec. Kelly Dobens, vocals, Korea;
- Spec. Deland Lawhorne, keyboard, Redstone Arsenal.
- Spec. Michael Williams, drums, Schweinfurt, Germany; and Pvt. Danny B. Brown Jr., technician, Fort Huachuca, Ariz.

USA Express will perform the latest top 40 chart hits as well as some oldies but goodies at Army installations throughout the United States. This year's show is sponsored in part by Miller Brewing Company.

For more information about the USA Express appearing at Sports Haven, call Sports Haven 876-6595; or the marketing and advertising branch of Directorate of Community and Family Activities 876-3030.

Brigade receives MLRS's new command/control system

Editor's note: The following article was provided by the FDDM Product Office which is part of Multiple Launch Rocket System Project Office.

The first Fire Direction Data Manager (FDDM) was formally fielded at the FDDM Support Facility at Fort Sill, Okla., on Sept. 27 to the 75th Field Artillery Brigade.

The FDDM, providing fire direction for the Multiple Launch Rocket System (MLRS), enhances the capabilities of the TACFIRE command and control system and gives the first Deep Battle capability to the MLRS and its family of munitions.

Lt. Col. Mario Cervantes, the FDDM product manager, presented the modified 5-ton FDDM configuration to the brigade.

On hand for the ceremony was Maj. Gen. John Dubia, Fort Sill commanding general, and Col. William Taylor, MLRS project manager.

Presentations commemorating the ceremony were given to Dubia, Col. Steven Arntz, commander of the 75th, and their command sergeants major.

Presentations of appreciation were given to the units that had participated in FDDM development testing. Those included Col. Billy Cooper, commander, 214th Field Artillery Brigade; Lt. Col. Richard Kniskern, commander, 3rd Battalion, 9th Field Artillery; and Gene Crostley, director of Communications and Electronics Command's Fire Support Software Engineering.

Ray Pietruszka, FDDM senior engineer, on behalf of all FDDM engineers and technicians, was given the honor of breaking a rare bottle of champagne against the 5-ton truck's bumper.

"I hated to see the bottle go because I've had it for almost 10 years," said Pietruszka, who's been with the FDDM since its inception.

"But I'd always promised myself that the first FDDM was getting champagne," he added.

FDDM began development in 1986 as a test device for the Army Tactical Missile System's Operational Test. New requirements to fire other munitions from the MLRS launcher made it necessary to upgrade the test device to a ruggedized, fully fieldable system.

"It has since evolved into a command and control system allowing the MLRS system to fire any existing or future rocket or missile with the addition of relatively simple software packages," Cervantes said. "Fielded at Corps, Brigade, Battalion and Battery, the FDDM gives the MLRS commander the capability to plan a battle four days in advance and execute Deep Battle firings."

The heart of the FDDM is the Communications and Data Processing Unit. The CDPU is a dual-processor VAX computer which gives expanded processing and communications capabilities to the basic Fire Direction System used by worldwide field artillery units. Built by Codar Technology Inc., in Longmont, Colo., the ruggedized CDPU was predicted to show a mean-time-between-failure of 800 hours but has experienced a MTBF of almost 3,500 hours. During its development, the FDDM had two major technical and two tactical tests at Fort Sill to prove the maturity of the software. The final tactical exercise was performed in May and June of this year during the Field Artillery Tactical Data System (FATDS) Package 10 Operational Test.

The software running the FDDM is composed of three packages. The one first seen by the operator is the basic Fire Direction System (FDS) which is the man-machine interface (front end processor) to the FDDM. Running on a Lightweight Computer Unit, the FDS is the current command and control system for all field artillery units.

The CDPU, as the hardware added to the FDS to make the FDDM, contains the other two software packages: the Communications Distribution Unit (CDU) and the Data Processing Unit (DPU). The DPU performs computations to allow MLRS munitions to fire while the CPU handles all communications between the FDS and DPU, as well as messages from the FDDM to other FDDMs or to the MLRS launcher.

Selected tactical MLRS units at Fort Sill, Fort Bragg, N.C., Germany and Korea, some 40 in all, will receive the FDDM through 1995. MLRS Project Office will integrate the FDDM into existing Fire Direction System and then be responsible for technical support to those fielded units.

Starting in late 1997, the FDDM is scheduled to be replaced by the Advanced Field Artillery Tactical Data System (AFATDS) Version 3.

The AFATDS will be used by not only MLRS units, but by all cannon units.

Self-development tests to provide feedback

WASHINGTON — Results of NCO self-development tests soon will be included among other eligibility criteria weighed by promotion boards and school-selection boards of the total Army.

"Beginning in fiscal year 1994 for the active component, and a year later for the reserve component, units will receive the SDT results," said Sgt. Maj. Ronald Schexnayder of the Army's Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Operations and Plans.

Besides being made available to unit record custodians, the SDT results also are being recorded in the individual's Military Personnel Records Jacket. From there, the results will be made available, in the second quarter of fiscal 1994, to the active component's promotion boards and school-selection boards (including those boards convened for Active Guard and Reserve soldiers). On the reserve-component side, the boards will begin receiving the test data in fiscal 1995.

Schexnayder stressed that this decision to inform units of the SDT results must not be construed as allowing the results to be used as a report card on unit training or unit leaders. "That use would be flawed, since the SDT is not a unit-training program," he said.

"We've simply concluded that making the results available to units can benefit the mentoring process," he explained. In this connection, "units must ensure that non-commissioned officers have access to the SDT study materials they need. And unit leaders," he continued, "should mentor and support the SDT efforts of their NCOs."

Schexnayder noted that NCOs "have overwhelmingly supported the need for feedback on their self-development progress." Unit ownership of test results can aid the feedback process, he said.

He stressed that the self-development test comprises that part of leader development which is most under the NCO's control. "The test ensures that the Army gives self-development the recognition and attention it deserves as an integral part of the leader development process." (Arnews)

Here's a Champus update on charges, court cases

Editor's note: The Office of Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services, public affairs branch, in Aurora, Colo., provided the following collection of Champus news items.

The Defense Department will soon reduce some Champus maximum allowable payments to physicians and other individual professional providers (including clinical laboratories), to more closely match Medicare fees.

For services rendered on or after Nov. 1, 1993, medical procedures for which the prior year's national Champus Maximum Allowable Charge (CMAC) exceeds the Medicare fee will be reduced by the lesser of: (1) the amount by which it exceeds the Medicare fee; or (2) fifteen percent.

Providers of care who want to know if the CMAC for a particular procedure has been reduced may contact the Champus contractor for their state.

Billing limits

Providers of care who don't participate in Champus (also called "accepting Champus assignment") will be limited in how much they can bill Champus patients, beginning next calendar year.

For services provided on or after Jan. 1, 1994, the Department of Defense Appropriations Act of 1993 says that providers who don't participate may bill Champus patients no more than 115 percent of the Champus allowable charge for a particular service. The 115 percent limit is the same as that used by Medicare.

Providers who don't comply with the limit on charges could lose their status as authorized providers of care under Champus. Champus-eligible persons who seek care from non-participating providers, and who believe that such a provider has overcharged for care, may contact the appropriate Champus claims processing contractor, or may write to: OChampus, Office of Program Integrity, Aurora, Colo., 80045-6900.

Insurance fraud case

The last of the defendants in the notorious Ocean-side insurance fraud case, also known as "Labscam" or "Rolling Labs," was convicted in late July on 18 criminal counts, including racketeering, money-laundering, conspiracy, mail fraud and theft of government property.

William O. Kupferschmidt, M.D., the only defendant to maintain his innocence, was found guilty after a three-month jury trial in U.S. District Court, Los Angeles. The case had been pursued by Champus headquarters and by investigative arms of other federal agencies since 1987, when a Champus patient complained about improper billing by a provider of care. Since the wide-ranging scheme to bill insurance companies and the government for unnecessary lab tests was uncovered, it's been estimated that more than $1 billion worth of fraudulent insurance claims were submitted to insurers and government agencies by more than 150 providers.

Earlier this year the organizers of the fraudulent operation, Michael and David Smushkevich, among others, pleaded guilty to similar charges. On July 23, the court entered a $50 million judgment against the participants in the illegal enterprise.

Kupferschmidt was scheduled to be sentenced Oct. 4. He could face a maximum prison term of 150 years.

Claims fraud

A Colorado obstetrician has been convicted in U.S. District court of filing about $12,000 worth of fraudulent Champus claims while he worked at Evans Army Community Hospital at Fort Carson, Colo.

Joseph M. Custodio, M.D., was convicted July 23, on 18 counts of submitting false claims to Champus for services that were actually provided to patients at the Army hospital by military doctors. He also double-billed for some services, billed for services not provided to patients, and billed for unnecessary services.

Sentencing was set for Sept. 20. Custodio could receive up to five years in prison and $250,000 in fines for each false claim.

Don't become a victim of telephone sales fraud

Editor's note: The following article was provided by the Judge Advocate General's Legal Assistance Office.

Shopping by phone has grown in popularity in recent years. It is a most convenient thing to do and your merchandise usually arrives very quickly. Businesses appreciate this economical way of doing business also.

Unfortunately, there are those businesses which will use the telephone to cheat consumers. The Alabama Attorney General's Office, through its Consumer Protection Office, says the following will help you avoid being a victim of telephone sales fraud or telemarketing fraud:

- Listen for hidden charges. You are told that you've just won a free prize. All you have to buy is the promotional merchandise. Watch it! Quite often, you will be paying for low-quality merchandise, an over-rated prize, shipping, plus a profit for the company.
- Listen for bargain vacations. You're offered a fabulous vacation for two for just $100. Careful! You may be buying only a discount travel card or certificate, and you will have to pay considerably more for the expected vacation — if you get it at all.
- Listen for double your money. The caller says you can double or triple your money in a brief time by investing in gold, oil, real estate, etc. It's all return guaranteed, no risk. Remember — a guarantee is only as good as the company behind it. If this is such a great thing, why is this company having to call to get investors?

Other warning signals to alert you to possible fraud are: a company address that is only a post office box, the caller exerting pressure for an immediate decision, and asking for credit card "verification." Always ask for a street address and references. In the case of pressure, that usually means the caller doesn't want you to have the opportunity to examine the situation very closely. Always get information in writing before you buy anything. Don't give out your credit card number for "verification." You may well find charges on your next bill that you didn't authorize.

Safeguards

The Attorney General recommends these step-by-step safeguards:

- If you've not done business with the company before, ask them to mail information on their operation and the specific offer. If they refuse, don't buy.
- Ask for specifics — brand names, what are the offered items made of, etc. Ask about the total amount you will have to pay — fees, taxes, delivery charges, insurance. Also, don't forget to ask how you can cancel the order and what it will cost to return merchandise and where do you send it.

— When dealing with charities, ask where your money goes. By law, telephone solicitors are required to tell you if they are paid solicitors rather than volunteers or employees of the charity.

— If it's an investment opportunity, ask to have a prospectus mailed to you. Legitimate offers are registered with the state securities commissions and/or the federal Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) or the Commodity Future Trading Commission (CFTC). Invest only after looking at the prospectus.

— If you order by phone, write down the date of the order, the name, address and phone number of the company, the date your order will be delivered, and any guarantees and policies for returns or cancellations.

— Always pay by credit card when ordering by phone. If there is a problem, you have up to 60 days after the charge appears on your bill to ask (in writing) that the card issuer credit you with the amount. If you have questions, contact the card issuer to find out what to do.

Lastly, if you are unhappy about a company doing business by phone, file a complaint as soon as possible. You could save many other people from the problems you've had. Call your local District Attorney's office, Better Business Bureau, or your state Attorney General's office.

Williams Elementary School adopted by company

Parents and students gathered Sept. 21 for an "adoption" in the cafetorium of J.E. Williams Elementary.

Williams is the designated elementary school for Redstone children, and they make up nearly 90 percent of its enrollment. Lockheed-Huntsville is participating in the Partners in Education Program with Williams.

The guest speaker, Dr. Ron Saunders, superintendent of Huntsville City Schools, opened the ceremony. Bob Drolet, director of Lockheed-Huntsville, and Lee McAllister, principal at Williams, signed the Partnership Agreement. Other Lockheed participants included Don Andrews, THAAD program manager; Bill Jones, Huntsville operations; Tim Morton, business manager; and Jim Hill, operations planning.

Students then presented the Lockheed guests with Williams mugs — and a surprise to all — Lockheed rolled out an IBM computer for the school. Two weeks prior, Lockheed delivered two computers to Williams. Refreshments followed the ceremony.

Fox Hospital offers health screening

Editor's note: Fox Army Community Hospital provided the following article.

During October, Family Health Month, explore ways to improve your health and the health of your family. For Fox Army Community Hospital beneficiaries, Preventive Medicine Service is offering Health Risk Appraisals (HRAs).

HRAs are information tools that assess a person's chance of dying from specific diseases over a certain period of time. They increase self-awareness about lifestyle as it relates to health and precursors of disease. Precursors are the signs, indicators or barriers that may indicate a greater chance of premature death or serious illness. HRAs also identify areas of lifestyle which, if modified, could improve health and quality of life.

A participant is given an appraisal form that covers such health habits as smoking, diet, seatbelt use, and exercise. In addition, factors such as blood pressure and cholesterol are assessed. This information is factored with U.S. mortality statistics and the statistics for common diseases. The results show the participants chances of dying from various causes in the next 10 years. These include heart attack, cancers and injuries.

The participants receive a computerized printout and recommendations on reducing risky behavior. As necessary, participants are referred to community resources to help reduce lifestyle risks.

If you are a Fox Army Community Hospital beneficiary, join us during Family Health Month by participating in a Health Risk Appraisal. Call Preventive Medicine 876-8831 for a HRA appointment. For questions, ask for Susan Goodman, registered nurse. The information you'll receive can help you make better health choices.

Neighborhood signs project dies from lack of interest

Editor's note: The Housing Management Division provided the following article.

In April and August, surveys soliciting recommendations for naming the family housing areas were distributed to each family residence on the installation. The intent of this effort was to involve residents, establish pride of ownership in our community and provide a basis for the proposed community mayoral program.

The responses to both neighborhood name surveys indicated an overwhelming lack of interest from the residents. The silence spoke volumes; this input was heard and the pursuit of neighborhood names and signs has been discontinued.

Priorities have been revised and the resources involved will be put to other uses in accordance with community desires.

Thank you to those families that participated in the surveys for their time and patience and to those that encouraged a review of installation priorities.

Lead poisoning poses hidden hazard to children

Editor's note: Lt. Col. Smith, M.D., is chief of primary care at Fox Army Community Hospital.

BY WILEY SMITH

Fox Army Community Hospital has begun a screening program to detect lead poisoning in young children.

Lead poisoning has long been known to be a health hazard to children, but recent research shows that lead poisoning can affect children at levels lower than previously considered safe. At low levels, lead can cause subtle changes in I.Q., hearing and growth. At higher levels, lead causes disturbances in vitamin D metabolism, anemia, kidney problems and behavior disturbance. Over 1,000 cases of lead poisoning have been reported in Alabama this year.

The screening program for children, which has been mandated by the Center for Disease Control and the Department of Defense, will test all children seen for well baby examinations at the age of 12 months. The test consists of a fingerprick blood sample. Children will be tested again somewhere between the ages of 2 and 5 years. A questionnaire looking for children who are at particular risk of lead poisoning will be given out during routine visits, starting at age six months. Lead tests are also recommended for pregnant women, since lead can pass through the placenta to an unborn child.

The most common source of lead poisoning for children is lead-based paint. Paint containing up to 50 percent lead was in widespread use through the 1940s. In 1978, lead-based paint was banned for use with houses and furniture. However, about 75 percent of houses built before 1980 contain lead-based paint.

Children who live in houses that have flaking paint are at particular danger of lead poisoning.

Lead poisoning for children can come from a variety of other sources. Lead does not degrade in the environment, and so remains in soil and dust from leaded gasoline and industrial pollution. Certain hobbies can release lead: indoor firing ranges, stained glass window frames, furniture refinishing and pottery glazes. Lead can contaminate drinking water, especially in houses that have lead pipes or copper pipes soldered with lead. Certain folk remedies contain lead. The names of some of these are Alarcon, Alkohol, Bali Goli, Coral, Ghasard, Greta, Liga, Pay-loo-ah, and Rueda.

For more information about testing for lead poisoning, contact the Preventive Medicine Service at Fox Army Community Hospital, telephone 876-8831.

Adventure course builds teamwork among co-workers

Editor's note: The following article was written by Romy Bayuga and Jetty Baddley, who are both Total Quality Management specialists with the Corporate Information Center.

On Sept. 21 Romy Bayuga and Jetty Baddley from the Corporate Information Center facilitated the first group of Security Assistance Management Directorate (SAMD) employees through the IMMC TeamWork Adventure course.

This was a wonderfully energetic team of people who were the first from SAMD to volunteer to experience an exciting and new approach to team-building. The team members included Bennie Gardner, Fay Lamons, Perry Michael, Shirley Keel, Pat Barbieri, John Caulkins, Ed Nowlin, Dave Dunham, Vern Bearden and John Furno, of SAMD's Tactical Missile System Management & Support Division.

Throughout the day, the facilitators continued to "up the ante" as the SAMD team negotiated numerous outdoor initiatives set in a wooded area on Redstone Arsenal. The initiatives are often related to the same team efforts required in the office; in fact, the initiatives are impossible without teamwork. This "hands-on" learning experience gives team members the opportunity to stretch their personal boundaries, see their fellow team members in a new light, plan their own solutions, listen to everyone's ideas and develop into a dedicated team.

The SAMD team met every challenge placed before them. Just to say a little, without giving secrets away, they swung on ropes, sat on logs, jumped through holes and even fell from the sky. Everyone had a great time!

There is no winning or losing at TeamWork Adventure — there is only positive learning through team spirit and cooperative attitudes. SAMD Deputy Director, Werner Lawther, and Division Chief, Don Ebert, also came out to see how the team was doing. Their interest and support in TeamWork Adventure are appreciated.

About 1,100 employees of Integrated Materiel Management Center have voluntarily gone through the course; and approximately 400 Corporate Information Center employees have also gone through the course.

A MICOM TeamWork Adventure Cadre is currently being trained and they plan to start TeamWork Adventure training mid-November through late fall (weather permitting). They plan to be fully operational in spring 1994.
